Pseudorabies: Serious or 'pseudo-problem'?

BY JACK HUBLEY

PENRYN — While members of a special Pseudorabies committee were introducing pork producers to their recently completed Pseudorabies virus (PRV) eradication plan, many producers were wrestling with a more fundamental question:

Is PRV eradication, in fact, necessary?

The question surfaced repeatedly at a meeting held in Penryn on Thursday afternoon when Penn State Extension veterinarian Larry Hutchinson and Lancaster County Extension livestock agent Chet Hughes unveiled the program to county producers. Two other meetings followed; one held at Lancaster's Farm and Home Center on Thursday night and a third held yesterday at the Earl Township building near New Holland.

Under the leadership of the Pa. Pork Producers Council, producers mobilized last November after the Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Animal Industry decided to refuse to issue permits to move infected herds after seven months. Thus the owner of swine testing positive for PRV had two choices: move the entire herd to slaughter within seven months—or eat them all himself.

This forced depopulation with no indemnity had proven to be a back breaker for a number of Lancaster County swine farmers in recent years. A producer-conducted survey of Lancaster County swine farmers last fall showed that forced depopulation resulted in a $565 loss per sow in farrow-to-finish operations and $387 per sow in farrowing-only facilities.

So the PRV committee—with representation from the packing, marketing and producer sectors as well as agricultural organizations—claimed that a better plan could be hammered out. And the Bureau elected to give the committee until May 1, of this year to prove it.

What surfaced this week was the fourth draft of the committee's battle plan. Basically, the committee resolved to deal with positive herds in one of three ways: In low-incidence herds, infected pigs would be removed, with testing and removal repeated every 30 days until the herd was virus-free.

Option two involved vaccinating the breeding herd and segregating replacement gilts. These gilts would be tested at about six months of age, with all positive gilts being removed. Retesting would occur 60 days later. This approach would be contingent on the producer having facilities to segregate herds, as well as the Bureau's willingness to permit the use of vaccine. At present, vaccines are prohibited in the state because any vaccinated hog will test positive. This makes vaccinated pigs indistinguishable from infected pigs, says Hutchinson.

A final option would be depopulation, but the plan states flatly tht there shall be no forced depopulation without indemnity.

To help producers make the right choice, a team of consultants

Carpenter touts NFU's family-farm campaign

BY JACK HUBLEY

YORK — National Farmers Union president Cy Carpenter squared off against the Reagan administration's farm policy during a series of public meetings held throughout Pennsylvania and southern New York this week.

"Agriculture is your largest industry, and this administration is trying to destroy it," said the chief of this Minnesota-based general farm organization while addressing about 50 Dauphin, York and Lancaster County farmers in York on Monday.

Carpenter charged that the plight of the nation's farmers is worsening rapidly, with land value losses alone amounting to $50 billion annually for the past three years.

"The proposal being offered by this administration is disaster, and there's no light at the end of the tunnel," Carpenter asserted, while reviewing the Department of Agriculture's market-oriented approach to agriculture

Current administration philosophy calls for a gradual phase-out of target price supports, with commodity prices eventually tied directly to market demand.

Carpenter took aim at the recent elimination of the dairy diversion program. Though the program

Cy Carpenter

'needed some improvements", Carpenter pointed out that the producer-financed diversion program did lower dairy production. "In spite of this," said Carpenter, 'this administration discontinued it, and offered nothing as a realistic replacement."

The NFU chief emphasized that such "callous indifference" to the plight of the American farmer can only lead to further exploitation of the farming community by "those

Duncan elected chairman of Penna. Dairy Promotion Board

BY WENDY WEHR

HARRISBURG — Donald B. Duncan, an independent dairy producer from Robesonia, Berks County, has taken over as chairman of the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program Advisory Board. On Thursday, fellow board members elected Duncan to fill the vacated dairy board post of former Secretary of Agriculture Penrose Hallowell.

Following the election, Duncan immediately took up the chairman's gavel and presided as the dairy promotion board allocated nearly $100,000 to fund a variety of advertising projects and events. Over the summer months the board will coordinate a dairy recipe contest, fund a variety of local promotion programs, and sponsor a "Dairy-ere in the Delaware" inner tube float.

Donald B. Duncan

Duncan has proven to be an articulate spokesman at previous board meetings and is a dairy promotion activist in his home county. As president of the Berks County Dairy Farmers Association, Duncan has led what he believes to be one of the finest dairy promotion programs in the state.

The Berks County group was one of the first to purchase a trailer, which they take to many fairs during the summer to sell milk shakes and ice cream and promote dairy products. Last year, $4,500 in proceeds from the trailer sales were used to purchase "Make It Milk" ads on the radio, said Duncan.

Their county dairy promotion committee is also unique, explained the new board chairman, because they have a paid coordinator providing program support

Eight horsepower 'snowplow'

If April showers bring May flowers, we can only hope that April snow showers yield the same results. Tuesday morning's unusual weather conditions failed to keep at least one Lancaster County farmer from his field work. Some say this "warm snow" is better than fertilizer.

Ask the Old Farmer: I am curious about the origin of the name turnips for the old large pocket watches men used to carry FB Huntington W Va

First of all they didn't call a watch a 'turnip' they called it a turnup One of the meanings of turnup is a stroke of good luck There was a time when a man who owned a watch was regarded as lucky

NOW IS THE TIME

To Start Grazing Gradually

With the amount of moisture in the soil this spring, warm weather will bring growth very rapidly in most pasture areas.

This will also be true with producers that are planning to graze winter grains such as rye or barley.

The herd or flock should be controlled at first, and not allowed on the area for more than a half hour; bloating and scouring may result if they consume too much of the lush forage the first few days.

Also, it's best to feed the animals some dry matter such as silage, hay or straw before turning them out to pasture the first few times.

Dairy farmers should keep milking cows from the grazing area at least 4 to 5 hours before the milking period.

To Consider Others

This is the time of year when relations become a bit strained between farmers and non-farm residents of the rural community.

This does not have to be this way if each person tries to understand the feelings and intentions of the other person. When livestock and poultry waste is spread on the farm land, which is an excellent practice, some people think they are going to be permanently injured by the odors.

When farmers understand the possible reactions from others in the community, they should attempt to spread this waste on fast-drying days and then incorporate it into the topsoil just as soon as possible.

On the other hand, non-farm people should understand this practice is a part of modern farming and a part of rural living. It may be unpleasant for a short time, but as far as I know, rural odors have never been proven to be health hazards. We hope everyone tries to understand the needs and cares of others.

To Manage Alfalfa Stands

With nearly every species of livestock, the feeding of top quality alfalfa hay or silage is highly recommended. At dairy meetings we hear how good alfalfa is in the ration, and at sheep meetings we learn that good alfalfa hay is the backbone of the ewe feeding program.

Alfalfa meal is often used as a source of protein in other rations. It all adds up to the fact that alfalfa is one of our most important forage crops.

Every farmer should make a special effort to produce maximum amounts per acre. This takes management along with proper lime, fertilizer, insect and disease control.

Since we are now at the beginning of another cropping season, more attention to alfalfa might benefit many farmers. Don't be satisfied with a poor stand. The crop is worthy of our best effort.

To Plant Trees

Trees are a very important part of our landscape, this is true in the urban areas as well as in the rural areas. This time of year is best suited for planting all kinds of trees.

Some are used for landscape purposes; some for shade and some for windbreaks. Trees are important to our environment and they add grace and beauty to many areas.

Trees provide shelter for many kinds of birds and wildlife, as well as the ability to conserve soil and moisture.

If you desire to plant trees, it should be done before hot weather arrives. Trees should be moved with a ball of soil wrapped in burlap. After planting be sure to keep the soil moist throughout the summer. Be a tree planter, you'll feel better for it.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

THOMAS THE COURAGEOUS
April 14, 1985

Background Scripture:
John 20:24 through 21:25.

Devotional Reading:
John 21:1-14.

I think the Apostle Thomas has had to take a bum rap from fellow Christians across the years. Although I have known of a few churches named St. Thomas, he is much more widely known as "Doubting Thomas." Whenever his name comes up, Christians are apt to respond with a dismissing smile or self-righteous disdain. If he is held up as an example, it is almost always as a negative one.

Everyone remembers that he refused to accept the testimony of his fellow apostles, saying: "Unless I see in his hands the print of the nails, and place my finger in the mark of the nails, and place my hand in his side, I will not believe." Some Christians also remember that, when Jesus proposed to go up to Jerusalem after the death of Lazarus, Thomas was pessimistic about the outcome (John 11:16). They may also recall that when Jesus said to his disciples, "And you know the way where I am going," Thomas protested, "Lord, we do not know where you are going; how can we know the way?" (14:5).

LET'S GO!

What we may forget is that, even though he was fearful of the outcome of going to Jerusalem, it was Thomas who said, "Let us also go, that we may die with him." And in John 14, it was Thomas' challenge to Jesus that occasioned Jesus immortal words: "I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to the Father, but by me" (14:6). And, when the Resurrected Christ appears to him in John 20, it is Thomas' response that is the most ringing of all commitments: "My Lord and my God!" (20:28).

I think that, on these grounds, this much-maligned apostle is just as deserving of the title, "Courageous Thomas," as he is "Doubting Thomas." To me it is not so important that he entertained skeptical questions in his mind, but that he overcame his skepticism and put his life on the line in a manner that served as an example for those who found it easier to say "Christ is Lord," than to act as if it were so.

FAITH AT WORK

Some of the other apostles found it relatively easy to put their faith into words, but Thomas is exceptional because he turned his questions into positive actions that should speak louder than his words. Actually, I wouldn't call Thomas a "Doubter" as much as I would a "Questioner" and that could very well make him the patron saint of our age. Today, with the advent of science and high technology, people have more, not fewer questions. Just as the Gospels do not tell us that Jesus ever rebuked Thomas' questions, so I would not chastise those who have the courage to ask the hard questions that must be asked. Hard questions generally produce better answers.

Lots of people have "all the right answers," but live as if they are untrue. I'll take the Thomases of this world who ask hard questions, and live courageous answers.

State Grange head backs RCMA

I am concerned about the future of our Pennsylvania diary farmers.

The milk support price is scheduled to drop to $11.60 later this year. That would bring the price down to 1979 levels. In the meantime, costs of production and costs of living in general continue to rise at the rate of 3 to 4 percent a year.

To a dairy farmer, a 50-cent drop in the support price will mean a decrease of 65 cents an hour from March, 1985 prices. If a farmer sells 50,000 lbs, of milk a month, he will receive $325 less in the month's milk check. At 100,000 lbs., that means $650 per month less in income.

In federal order 4, the milk price has already dropped 77 cents per cwt. from January to May, 1985.

But there is one bright spot on the horizon. Dairymen now have a chance to help themselves get a better price for milk by joining the Regional Cooperative Marketing Agency (RCMA). RCMA has been called a "super cooperative" that is organizing throughout the northeast to bargain for over-order prices for milk. Its membership is made up of both independent and cooperative farmers. Many major dairy cooperatives in the northeastern states have already joined the effort.

RCMA is seeking to sign up 95 percent of all dairy farmers in the northeast after which it would bargain for over-order prices so dairy farmers can maintain some sort of income. There are no dues for RCMA and no assessments Normal operating costs (averaging one-half cent per cwt.) would be deducted from the over-order price collected from handlers and returned to the farmer.

I don't see higher milk prices coming out of the 1985 Farm Bill with the Administration planning to scale down its involvement in the dairy price support program. If dairy farmers don't take the initiative to help themselves, they can be assured of lower prices in 1985-1986.

As a dairy farmer myself, I know how hard it is to make the milk check reach. I urge all independent dairy farmers to join RCMA as they are contacted by dairy farmers in their counties. Let's all work together for better milk prices.

Potato ban extended in upstate New York

WASHINGTON – An additional area of upstate New York has been included under federal regulations to prevent the spread of the golden nematode, a destructive pest of potato crops, according to a U.S. Department of Agriculture official.

"Monitoring by USDA and state personnel indicates the golden nematode has spread beyond its former boundaries in upstate New York," said Bert W. Hawkins, administrator of USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service. "To help prevent further spread, part of Livingston County, N.Y., has been added to those areas already regulated."

The golden nematode is a small worm that attacks the roots of Irish potatoes and a few other plant species. Golden nematode infestations can drastically reduce yield and even destroy an entire potato crop if unchecked. The nematode's range currently is confined to parts of upstate New York and Long Island.

Hawkins said the golden nematode is the most serious pest threat to the U.S. potato industry. "In orer to protect uninfested potato-producing areas, federal regulations prohibit the interstate movement of potatoes, soil and other items that could harbor the pest from infested areas," he said.

Regulated areas now include all or part of Cayuga, Genesee, Livingston, Nassau, Orleans, Seneca, Steuben, Suffolk, Wayne and Yates counties in New York. Sections of Livingston county now included in the regulated area are the towns of Avon, Caledonia, Geneseo, Groveland, Leicester, Lima, Livonia, Mount Morris, West Sparta and York.

Will multiple component milk pricing pay?

By Dr. George F. W. Haenlin
University of Delaware

Milk price supports and major changes in dairy programs continue to be in the spotlight. Multiple component pricing–the adjustment of milk prices for other components of milk besides butterfat–is one of these proposed changes.

One argument in favor of such a pricing method is that most milk produced today goes into manufactured dairy products, particularly cheese. These products depend on the solids content of milk for quality and yield.

Milk of average composition contains 87.7 percent water, 3.7 percent butterfat and 8.6 percent solids-non-fat (SNF). The SNF component includes 4.8 percent lactose, 3.2 percent protein and 0.6 percent minerals. About 78 percent of the protein in milk is usable, as casein, for cheese making. Milk solids levels vary from farm to farm and seasonally. Since solids and protein are not strongly correlated with butterfat, it makes sense to test and price milk according to its solids or protein content as well as butterfat.

The idea of pricing milk on this basis isn't new. I did a lot of basic research on this subject at the University of Delaware in the 1960s. But there are roadblocks to implementation. These include: (1) the high cost of testing for solids, protein and especially casein; (2) disagreement over which components to test and pay for–SNF, protein or casein; (3) the absence of established market values for protein or other solids except casein; (4) current Federal Market Order regulations; (5) the economics of processing fluid milk; and (6) the uncertainty of farmers as to what financial impact multiple component pricing would have on them.

California is the only major U.S. area to have implemented multiple component pricing, though such systems have been used for years in Europe. Californians test for fat and solids-not-fat, pricing milk according to pounds of solids. Differentials for fat and SNF are related to butter and nonfat dry milk prices and a value is assigned to water as the "carrier." Fluid processors pay the same SNF component price as other processors.

California standards require fluid milk products to have above average SNF contents or to be fortified with nonfat dry milk. This encourages fluid processors to purchase high SNF milk. It concerns me and many others that the Northeast, with its problems of low fluid milk use, does not adopt this practice.

In the past few years various dairy cooperatives and processors, mainly in the Midwest, have implemented their own multiple component pricing plans. These plans are based on protein content rather than SNF. Farmers receive a protein bonus (or premium) or a differential like that paid for butterfat. Premiums normally range from 3 to 12 cents per 0.1 percent of protein or 30 cents to $1.20 per pound of protein in 100 pounds of milk. These bonuses are often contingent on such quality standards as somatic cell count to help assure normal yields for cheese processors. Twelve cents is about half of protein's worth in cheese and slightly more its value in nonfat dry milk.

Another plan adopted by cheese processors in unregulated regions is end-product pricing. This recognizes the value of fat and SNF or protein in cheese production. Processors calculate a farmer's milk price by using a yield formula, multiplying this by the cheese price, and subtracting a processing margin.

Scientists at Cornell University recently studied the potential impact of various pricing plans on farm income and returns to processors, using monthly milk weights, protein and fat tests from 93 farms in western New York. Under a fat-protein differential system, 56 producers lost an average of $607 in income (8.5 cents/cwt) and 37 producers gained $731 (10.2 cents/cwt). When end-product pricing was compared with the current system, 56 farmers lost an average of $1,249 (17.4 cents/cwt), while 37 increased their income by an average $1,942 (21.6 cents/cwt).

The study showed that the farms which lost money under either of these multiple component systems had protein levels below the standard 3.16 percent. In fact, there were more farms below this protein standard than above it. Higher producing farms had above average protein levels and there was a positive but weak correlation between a farm's fat and protein contents.

For example, two farms currently had equal fat levels and prices but under the alternative pricing systems their prices changed due to differences in milk protein content. Only one herd in the study had fat levels over 4.0 percent and this herd ranked first in price per hundredweight under all the pricing programs. (Effects of cattle breed on milk composition were not studied.) Fat and protein content of milk from different farms varied widely (3.27 to 4.48 percent and 3.05 to 3.56 percent, respectively), so there was a significant spread in prices per hundredweight of milk under the different pricing plans.

Producers whose milk tests were below average would be disadvantaged under such pricing systems, but this doesn't mean that all Holstein herds would suffer or that only owners of Jerseys and other colored breeds would benefit. As with the current butterfat differential, Holsteins can compensate for a relatively lower test by having a higher volume.

The specifics of any component milk pricing plan need to be carefully examined. No particular plan is automatically good or bad. Better cheese yields from higher testing milk and the superior consumer taste appeal of this milk, which could lead to increased fluid consumption, could be strong arguments in favor of implementing multiple component pricing plan for milk.

Only then will testing the milk from individual cows for protein or SNF content make financial sense to dairy farmers. Those presently testing for these factors are building for the future by identifying cows and bulls with the genetic ability to transmit higher component potential to their offspring.

Good weed control practices save money

NEWARK, DE – Spring planting will soon be in full swing. A key part of any farm management system is good weed control. This is closely tied to making timely chemical applications, using proper herbicides and getting good coverage.

"Everything must work together so each job gets done at the right time," says University of Delaware extension county agricultural agent Dean Belt. "Have spray equipment in top condition well in advance. This allows you time to clean it out properly and make necessary adjustments, repairs and calibration checks."

Calibration is vital to knowing how much chemical is being applied to crops, Belt says. There are many reasons to calibrate before you enter the field.

If too little is applied or if the spray pattern is uneven, weed control may be poor. If too much is applied, extra money is spent with no chance of getting a return on it and crop injury may result. Calibration will pay for itself and isn't nearly as complicated as it sounds.

Another way to save time and money is to mix chemicals properly. Wrong or incompatible mixes can cost money, time and performance, Belt says. Before tank mixing, make sure the products are labeled to mix together and compatible for the planned spray program, especially when using liquid fertilizer in place of water.

Before starting the mixing operation be sure the sprayer and tank are free of oil, grease or any chemical residues. Then:

- Fill the tank one-quarter full with the liquid carrier and turn on the agitator. Adjust the agitation to bring about a rolling action that reaches the surface of the liquid.
- Premix chemicals in buckets of water if possible. This step greatly reduces compatibility problems.
- Add the compatibility agent to the tank according to its label.
- While agitating, add pesticides slowly to the tank in the following order: (1) Add wettable powders and water dispersible granules, allowing time for thorough mixing. (2) Fill the tank to about 90 percent of capacity, then add the liquid. (3) Finally add any elumsifiable concentrates to the tank. Complete filling with water and you're ready to spray.

The agent strongly suggests making up an easy-to-follow check list for each spray schedule. It's a

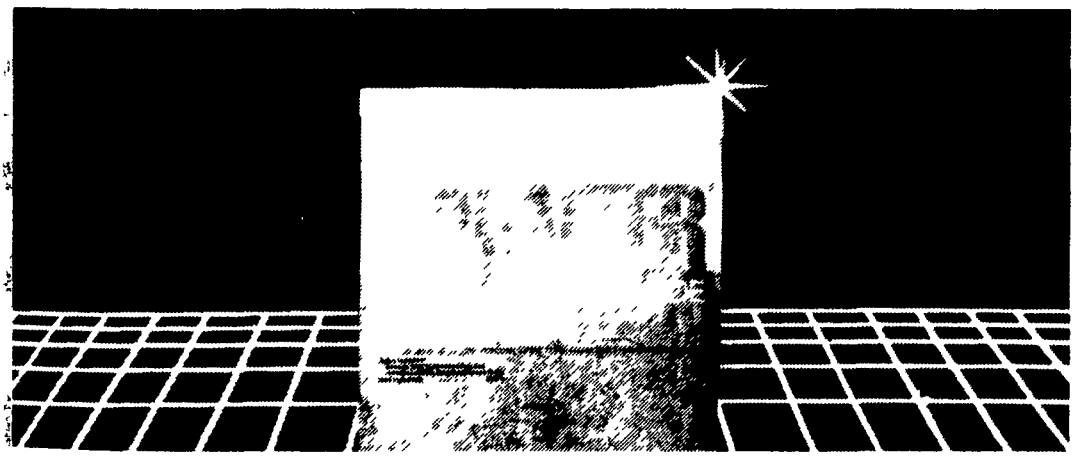
WE RECOMMEND COUNTER® FOR THE BROADEST-SPECTRUM CONTROL YOU CAN GET.



When you plant corn for a living, you can't afford to take chances with your crop. Growers around here know they can come to us for COUNTER® systemic insecticide-nematicide. COUNTER delivers the broadest-spectrum control available. COUNTER protects your crop with outstanding control of rootworms, nematodes, seed corn maggots, seed corn beetles, wireworms, symphylans, white grubs, billbugs and flea beetles. And COUNTER delivers cutworm suppression, too. All at one low rate.

Best for Conservation Tillage

If you practice conservation tillage, COUNTER fits your operation. You can apply it banded or in the seed furrow, where it can't blow away or get hung up in crop residues. COUNTER is seed safe, even applied in-furrow. And COUNTER controls on contact and systemically to protect your young crop and get it off to a fast, healthy stand.

Best for First-Year Corn

Rootworms may not be a major problem in your first-year corn, but there's a complex of other pests that attack your crop and can substantially reduce plant vigor, stands and yields. Many farmers around this part of the country are reporting much better stand counts and yields after using COUNTER insecticide on first-year corn.

So if you plant corn for a living, stop by and see us for the best crop protection you can get. Come by for all the facts. And see why we recommend COUNTER for the broadest-spectrum control you can get.

good idea to measure each item in a bucket or other suitable container and arrange buckets in the order in which materials are to be added to the tank. This will make it clear if everything has been added to each tank mixture.

If unsure about compatibility, always use the quart jar method, mixing chemicals in the same order as for a full-scale tank mix, using a pint of liquid carrier, one-quarter teaspoon compatibility agent and about one level teaspoon of each pesticide. Mix gently and allow to stand. If the mixture is free of lumps, flakes or sludge it should be O.K.

Play it safe. Have a drum or at least a 5-gallon can of clean water, a bar of strong soap and a supply of towels on hand at all times to wash off any spills or splashes, Belt cautions. Be sure to wear rubber gloves and protective equipment. Don't take chances!

Attorneys tell farmers:

How employers can avoid legal problems with workers

BY MONTIE TAK
Staff Correspondent

CARLISLE – When John Steinbeck wrote "The Grapes of Wrath" in 1939, he told the story of the Joan family who journeyed west to try to find work in Depression-era migrant labor camps.

While conditions in labor camps have changes since then, the rights and problems of migrant labor are still of prime concern to grower and worker alike.

The Dickinson School of Law in Carlisle recently hosted an agricultural labor management workshop to discuss those concerns.

Attorneys, growers and workers gathered to share their views on preseason responsibilities of growers, inseason requirements, worker disputes and complaints and dispute resolution. Jane Rigler, a professor of law at the school, moderated the discussion, which was attended by 100 people.

"I look at this as the start of communication, if not cooperation, at least an enhanced understanding of the different points of view," says Steve Crawford, the director of governmental relations for the Pennsylvania Farmers Association.

The last 15 years of farmer-worker relations, he added, have been mainly characterized by rhetorical exchnage.

Crawfors says most of the audience consisted of growers who, like most other farmers rely more heavily on their employees more than do many other types of employers.

"The overwhelming majority of employers are concerned about the welfare of their workers," he says "This is one of the favorable gestures."

Every grower should learn how to deal with and avoid worker complaints, Larry Norton, an attorney for Camden Regional Legal Services, told the seminar

"Resolve complaints early by having a direct relationship with your workers," says Norton. "Or very closely supervise your crew leaders."

If a dispute is not resolved and you receive a letter or a telephone call from a labor advocate, Norton emphasizes the necessity not to stonewall. There are several reasons why it is important to resolve problems promptly.

Cost to the grower is one reason. If the grower is found negligent, he will be out the actual damages the court finds against him. He will have spent money for a lawyer and in a protracted case, legal fees may run into several thousand dollars. In some cases, the grower may have to pay the legal fees for the workers.

Unresolved disputes can create a lot of antagonism between a grower and a worker. Norton reminds growers they may have to face the worker in the worker in the future. And he hastens to remind growers that workers who are fairly treated can be more productive.

"The most usual problem," he says, "centers around getting the work you are promised."

A misrepresentation regarding the amount of available work is serious. The next concern of the worker is getting the pay he or she is entitled to have. Workers must understand the deductions made from their pay, as well.

Other potential sources of trouble are housing offered to workers and transportation to work sites.

"The most important thing is to get farmers to talk directly to farm workers," Norton says. "The second best is the use of legal advocates to speak for the workers." But he considers the use of third parties, as in private arbitration, to be "a step backward."

He feels it is vital for the farmer to head off disputes by making sure you know what workers have been told and to take responsibility for this when they are recruited. Know what goes on between the crew leader and the workers and deal with the people's complaints directly.

"Stonewalling can be a matter of pride. Some farmers don't want to admit there's anything to talk about when they receive a demand letter," he said. "If you do show up in court you will look better if you have made efforts to resolve disputes."

His thoughts were echoed by another participant, Norm White, an attorney with McNees, Wallace and Nurick of Harrisburg.

"You get credit if you make an honest effort to resolve a dispute before it goes to litigation," adds White.

White acknowledges the farmer has a tremendous investment of capital subject to elements he cannot control, such as weather and insects. "To a degree," says White,"the worker may also be an unstable element."

But he says it is necessary for the farmer to see–and solve–injustices among people who may not be able to articulate their grievances.

"If you react badly," he cautions, "you will deserve what you get." The farmer's attitude is important and White adds there may be another side to the story.

"If the worker comes to you with a complaint it may take a tremendous amount of courage for him to face you," says White. The grower should ask [illegible] courage and involve himself directly by looking into the problem.

There may be a time when the grower has to decide when to call a lawyer. He says you must determine how much is involved and if a number of issues are involved, it shows you have a need for early legal analysis and services.

"Your ignorance is not an excuse," added another participant, Attorney Del Lantz. "Know your obligations and make an honest effort to follow the law."

If a grievance is substantial, you as a grower may be the subject of a class action suit. When this occurs, says Lantz, one plantiff with a complaint that is widespread may stand for several or many other workers.

"This is difficult for an employer because it can involve all the past employees," says Lantz. "This is why it is important to keep accurate, credible records."

The most important thing for a grower to do, says Art Read, an attorney with Friends of Farm Workers, Inc. in Philadelphia, is to start a dialog with his workers.

The worker has a right to demand a description of employment, he says. This would tell the worker what he was picking, how much he would be paid and how much work was available.

"Another common problem is a worker complaint about housing," says Read. "If he has a legitimate complaint you can not just tell him to get out."

A growelr can not require workers to buy meals from him; Read says the "company store" operation is a direct violation of law. You also can not tell workers they may not apply for food stamps. Workers perceived as "troublesome" can not be blacklisted by either the grower or the crew leader.

"You are liable if a worker proves you haven't dealt with him

Migrant labor - one worker's story

BY MONTIE TAK
Staff Correspondent

If you want to know about a farm worker's life, ask Joseph Allen. If it grows, he's probably picked it.

Over 20 years ago Allen emigrated from the island of Grenada to Florida.

"I go to plenty other states since then," he says.

During his travels, Allen picked corn in Wisconsin, apples and cherries in Michigan, tobacco in Connecticut, oranges, sweet peppers, tomatoes and strawberries in Florida, and apples, peaches and tomatoes in Pennsylvania, Virginia and North Carolina.

He spent eight years as a crew leader, supervising and directing the workers' labor for growers.

A Chambersburg resident, Allen is chairman of the local advisory board for Pennsylvania Farm Workers Opportunities. Over the years he has seen a lot of changes in the ways farm workers are treated.

"Back then we didn't have these organizations for legal help. We didn't know anything about how migrants could get help, like if you had an injury in the field, picking. Now we know the growers are responsible for workmen's compensation.

"We have the facilities to know what we have a right to know."

Workers are entitled to know the type of work involved and the per hour wage as well as the amount of work available. Much of Allen's volunteer work is to educate farm workers to their rights.

One of the most essential things Allen sees about grower-worker relationships is "to get one-to-one with the growers. You can share with one another and air your complaints. Twenty years ago they just knew you as a worker and not to be heard.

"Now you are heard and not just to complain."

A source of potential misunderstanding is the relationship with the crew leader. Because of the size of some farms, workers may never actually meet the grower. The crew leader acts as intermediary.

"The crew leader has tremendous power," points out Allen. "The way he operates is like partnership with the grower." Crew leaders, he adds, should not take advantage of the people or be overgenerous.

If there are labor difficulties, the workers may not know what the grower and crew leader discuss behind closed doors. Difficulties can also result from federal or state camp inspectors who might accept a payoff to close their eyes to certain conditions.

Allen also sees a conflict between federal and state standards relating to living conditions in the camps. "Asking for two different requirements, state and federal, can make conflicts," he says. "There should be just one set of standards."

Alternatives to migrant labor?

BY MONTIE TAK
Staff Correspondent

According to Lawrence McMillan, there is a viable alternative to traditional migrant labor living in camps on the growers' property.

McMillan, a member of Farm Workers Opportunities, advocates busing workers to farms each day and returning them to their own homes in the evening. He feels this plan would eliminate the potential for abuse of farm workers' rights in migrant camps.

He says there are 75 qualified workers "or more" right near where he lives in Allentown. All of the workers need transportation to farms and McMillan wants to get these workers and the state's growers together.

Most of the workers he represents the Florida pickers who remained in the north after previous picking seasons instead of returning south.

"These are good people," says McMillan. "They know how to pick. They know how to climb trees. Now they are on the food stamp program just waiting for an opportunity to work.

"A lot of people would love to do this work," he continues. "Our office is overflowing with people now. We are trying to place as many as we can."

Additional advantages he sees are that workers could work year-round for the farmers, doing pruning and maintenance in the off-season.

He says the people he represents have ability and could offer their loyalty to the growers. And a long-range advantage to everyone's benefit would be the alleviation of state programs as capable people went back to work and in their turn became taxpayers.

"It is to the workers' advantage not to live on the farm. It is to the farmers' advantage to eliminate the middleman and to eliminate providing lodging for the workers," McMillan points out.

"There are more advantages to the grower than disadvantages."

CCC loans at 9¾%

WASHINGTON – Commodity loans disbursed in April by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corporation will carry a 9-3/4 percent interest rate, CCC Executive Vice President Everett Rank said today.

The new rate, up from 9-1/8 percent, reflects the interest rate charged by the U.S. Treasury in April, Rank said.

Hanover hog producer offers $100 bills to lucky youth exhibitors

BY JOYCE BUPP
Staff Correspondent

HANOVER – Roger Bankert likes to give out hundred-dollar bills.

Bankert, a Hanover hog producer, handed out three of the triple-digit greenbacks last year to lucky youth pig project exhibitors.

Admittedly, there's a catch to the giveaway. To cash in on Bankert's generosity, a 4-H or FFA member must take the grand champion prize at a local show or roundup with a hog purchased through the Bankert family's spring project sale.

A gimmick? Perhaps. But that'w what Bankert and his wife, Darlene, figure will help generate interest from area youth in their sales offerings, plus give the purchaser and added boost to do an especially good job in raising the project animal.

The Bankert family is now finalizing plans for the third annual sale. One hundred of their best eight-week crossed and purebred feeders are lined up for that auction on April 19 at the York Fairgrounds, beginning at 7 p.m.

The initial offer of the hundred dollar prize to champion winners was made at the first sale in 1983. Two winners claimed the cash that first season from the York and Adams county roundups. The three lucky recipients were the York and Lebanon 4-H roundup champs and York Fair champion overall during 1984. Word of the bonus quickly made the rounds of youthful exhibitors, and sharpened interest and determination to cop the Bankert award.

Original intent of the sale was to provide area youngsters with selection of suitable project possibilities. That purpose has been well served, with nearly every offering purchased by or for youth project use. Most buyers, in fact, make multiple purchases.

Bankert's interest, however, doesn't stop at the sales clerk's table. He follows up on the project pigs as much as possible, stopping to check with owners on their progress during the season, and offering advice on care and feeding.

"Feed good quality feed," is his capsule recommendation for raising high-placing hogs. That means an 18-percent protein feed for the first three to four weeks, then dropping back to and maintaining a 16-percent level. "And keep your hog clean and healthy," he added.

About a month prior to the show or roundup date, Bankert suggests that pig owners put their animals on an exercise program, walking them daily, to maintain the judge-pleasing, lean, meaty, muscled look.

Bankert acquired his own first hog for FFA use in 1959, when his uncle helped the high school freshman purchase a bred Chester White gilt at the Farm Show sale. Of the nine pigs in her first litter, he was able to raise eight, forming the core of his beginning hog herd.

He returned the following year, and took home the Farm Show champion for a fina bid of $160, a considerable investment at that time for a project hog.

"I scraped money together, and went back again the next year, and bought the reserve champion, for $190," relates Bankert.

But the young swine breeder turned pioneer in 1966, when he purchased the first purebred Duroc brought into York County.

"I thought it was an up and coming breed," he says of the now popular rusty-red colored hogs. "Feed companies were already seeing the trend at that time." The addition a few years later of two Ohio top-bred Durocs to the Bankert breeding lines "really put us into the Duroc business."

Today, says the purebred promoter, Durocs comprise the nation's largest breed of recorded-pedigree hogs. About two thousand Durocs are registered annually in Pennsylvania alone.

Satisfied customers continue to purchase Bankert purebred and crossed stock on a regular basis. With a breeding herd of 35 Durocs, a half-dozen Chester Whites and one Berkshire, there is always a selection available.

Boar hog sales comprise a large portion of the merchandising animals and Bankert has established a reputation for his outstanding sire stock. One boar he sold in 1980 holds the state Duroc sale record, commanding a $2,100 price.

Although word-of-mouth recommendations bring in a flow of buyers, a regular advertising program covers area farm and local newspapers, as well as breed publications. The family is also well-known on the hog show circuit, frequently placing in the top at local York shows, the Pennsylvania Farm Show, Maryland State Fair, and some national competition in the past.

While "stringbean" hogs were in vogue until just recently, Bankert saw a change in judging last year, with officials eyeing a shorter-legged pig.

A judge in his own right, Bankert says he looks for "basics." He wants hogs to be sound and meaty with gilts showing feminity and "boars that look like boars." Judging prerequisites, though, all point back to the finished carcass, the bottom line in hog breeding goals.

Following in parental footsteps, the Bankert's three children have managed to make their own marks in local hog arenas.

Daughter Michelle, now married and living near the family hog operation, gained widespread media attention in 1981, when she earned a whopping $19.50 per pound bid on her 240-pound Farm Show champion. It was a high point in a 4-H career colored with frequent purple champion rosettes and shining trophies.

Brian, a high school junior, and 13-year-old Greg, continue to snag top spots with their hogs, often those purchased through the family sale, using earnings from previous project pigs. And, both boys make a point of selecting hogs with no advice from either parent, then bidding right along with other sale contendors. Occasionally, one feeder they've specifically singled out tops their price range, and sends them back to the catalog for an alternative choice.

With his purchase from the 1983 sale, Brian topped the county's late-season roundup, and collected the hundred-dollar bonus from his dad. His selection savvy earned the 4-H'er a second success, when last spring's buys captured the roundup pairs championship. In addition to his hogs, Brian is raising a flock of project sheep.

While younger brother Greg hasn't yet snagged one of his dad's greenback awards, he was in the running for a while at the county roundup, when an entry took the middleweight division honors Coming that close has made him even more determined to try again

Both have already spent considerable time studying project possibilities, but are keeping their choices a well-guarded secret. It's a sure bet, though, that come sale night on April 19, they'll be in the crowd of bidders, pitting their hog selection knowledge against that of dozens of other buyers. And behind those bids will be hopes for the eventual payoff of a purple champion rosette - and the Bankert greenback bonus.

A jay, a favorite of Roger Bankert's herd boars, is the sire of several of the youth project pigs to be offered in the family's April 19 sale at the York Fairgrounds.

The Bankert sons keep their own selections a highly-guarded secret until all the bidding is through. Greg, the youngest, does some lengthy observation of the stock to see which fit his requirements in a project pig.

York County 4-H'er Tim Ferrence took champion honors at the 1984 late summer hog roundup, and earned a hundred-dollar cash award from breeder Roger Bankert.

Liquid manure hauler makes spring less hectic

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

LEBANON — With the spring season pushing new life across the landscape, farmers begin their busy planting season. Freshly plowed furrows, tractors and spreaders, discs and drills dot the countryside alongside the new buds and bits of green.

This is the time to clean out the barns, prepare the fields, and plant the oats. Farmers hurry to get into the wetter fields before more spring rains, and rush to get their field work well underway before the next season brings a new list of chores.

But farmers are not the only people rushing to get finished with one field and into the next. There is a related business, of much benefit to dairymen and cropsmen alike. This job also promises 16 to 18 hour days, six days a week, for three months in the spring and three months in the fall. For many farmers with manure storage facilities, liquid manure haulers provide a fast, economical service that takes care of a major problem and frees the farmer for other chores.

With the advent of long-term manure storage facilities, such as earthen-bank lagoons, concrete holding areas, underground pits, or concrete holding tanks, came the need to have them agitated, and pumped several times a year. Equipment costs, already overburdening, are overwhelming for an individual farmer. But with liquid manure haulers, such as Leon Litzenberger, R6, Lebanon, the farmer can have his storage facility custom emptied and the manure spread on his fields. The management advantage that long term manure storage means to an operation can become more attractive in that the farmer can have the fertilizer spread when he wants it done, economically, and without losing time from his other work.

Litzenberger arrives at the farm with his 15-ton capacity, liquid manure hauling truck. With pressure unloading, the tank truck can splatter the liquid across the fields in a short time. If an agitator and pump are needed for the particular operation, (many lagoon systems make this a necessity), Litzenberger arranges to have the equipment rented. Charging the farmer by the hour as he empties the facility and spreads the manure on the fields. Litzenberger usually works straight through the day and into the night to get the job completed as soon as possible.

"I like agriculture. I like outside work and I don't like going to the same place every day," Litzenberger states about his business. Litzenberger lives on a small farm in Lebanon County and is able to cover Lebanon and surrounding counties with his service.

"I always stayed with agriculture," Litzenberger relates about his start in this business. Raised on a beef and tobacco farm, he began hauling milk cans as one of his first jobs. From milk cans, he started operating a portable feed grinder business and ran full routes six days a week. Health problems turned him to truck driving, hauling eggs into Canada. But truck driving kept him away from home too much, the busy man relates. When the liquid manure hauling business became available, Litzenberger saw a chance to stay in agriculture and work from home

Emptying manure storage facilities since August 1984, Litzenberger confesses that his business has doubled. "I started in August, and with the business that was with the truck, it's only half of what I'm doing now," he says. "In six months it's doubled," he adds.

According to Litzenberger, there is a big demand for this type of service. Pig and dairy operations are his most numerous callers and the smaller storage facilities see him come in several times a year.

His business also depends on the weather and he tries to schedule farms according to the field conditions and the size of the facility. He usually arrives at a job at four to five in the morning and pumps until one or two the following morning.

"I try to have them lined up so I can get in 16 hour days," Litzenberger states, "cause it's only going to last for three months."

"Three months in the spring and three months in the fall are pretty busy months," he adds. "Right now, I have enough (clients scheduled) for the next two weeks," the hauler says. Litzenberger schedules smaller facilities in between larger ones so that when he finishes in the afternoon, he can go directly to another operation.

When Litzenberger's rush season is over, he schedules smaller facilities throughout the year and hauls for a freight company as time permits.

He looks forward to having his oldest son, Glenn, help him this coming summer and is considering buying another truck to keep with the demand for his service.

"I'm thinking of putting a second truck on," he says, and also mentions the purchase of his own agitator and pump. "I intend to add on whatever it takes," he continues about his future growth. Stating that he does not advertise because he is still by himself, he adds, "I didn't want to grow too fast. I thought it would be better to learn a little first."

Litzenberger uses a pump and agitator at this earthen bank lagoon to load his truck with the liquid manure. At this particular lagoon, loading time took approximately two minutes, and because he didn't have far to haul it, it took only 15 to 20 minutes to unload and spread.

Here the pump and agitator work to break up the solids in the lagoon.

According to Duane Pysher, district conservationist with the Soil Conservation Serivce, long term manure storage facilities are proving very beneficial to farmers, and are better than the daily spreading. "You now have control of when you are putting it on," he added.

The manure can be incorporated into the ground immediately. "The farmer can account for the nutrients he has," Pysher says. "There is also better utilization of nutrients by plants."

Compared to the daily spreading where a farmer must spread in all kinds of weather and soil conditions, he has no way of knowing what he has left when he gets to plowing it in. Long term storage and spreading once in the spring and fall provides better nutrient utilization and prevents many water quality problems, says Pysher.

With a service such as Litzenberger's, the farmer has more time to get into his fields when weather permits. "Particularly the fact that he (Litzenberger) has the equipment to move in and get the job done, leaves the farmer time to get to his fieldwork. It frees them for other things," Pysher states.

"There's a lot of management pluses. Six-month storage should be a minimum," Pysher advises. "Ideally the facility should hold a year's capacity." "With corn and alfalfa the main crops in this area, many farmers don't have places to spread manure in the summer months," he continues. Spring spreading is the most beneficial to crops according to this conservationist.

Berks County SCS has averaged 15 to 20 manure holding facilities a year and is one of the leading counties in southeast Pennsylvania with the number of facilities. "They're not that expensive," Pysher adds.

There is a cost share program available to farmers for manure storage facilities. The SCS will develop a unique plan for each operation according to the water table, size of facility needed, lay of the land, and soil conditions. Once facility is completed according to specifications and approved, the farmer can apply for cost sharing with the ASCS office for 75 percent or $2,500. Henry Bohn, county executive director ASCS, reports that numerous facilities over the last few years have been cost shared.

Litzenberger is able to quickly spread the manure over the fields with his 15-ton capacity truck.

USDA announces official dairy support prices

GREEN BAY, Wis. – The national support price for milk was reduced from $12.60 to $12.10 per hundredweight on April 1, according to Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block. He added, however, that the current $.50 per hundredweight deduction from the proceeds of all milk marketed for commercial use by producers will end on March 31.

"We have determined that the new support price will assure an adequate supply of wholesome milk to meet current needs," Block said. "It is our hope that this adjustment will bring supply and demand into a better balance. At the same time, producers will be relieved of the $.50 per hundredweight deduction required by the Dairy and Tobacco Adjustment Act of 1983."

The support price is being reduced under provisions of the 1983 Act, which authorizes the Secretary to reduce the support price on April 1 if net price support purchases by the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) in the next 12 months are estimated to exceed six billion pounds of milk equivalent.

"Even with the reduced support price, we estimate net price support purchases by CCC for the next 12 months will be 9.1 billion pounds milk equivalent," Block said. "The reduction in the support price is needed to bring about a reduction in the excessive CCC purchases and costs of the program."

The support price of $12.10 is for milk with a milkfat content of 3.67 percent–the national average–and compares with $11.82 per hundredweight for milk with a milkfat content of 3.5 percent.

The $12.10 support price will remain in effect until September 30, 1985," Block said. "However, the 1983 Act authorizes an additional adjustment in the level of price support on July 1, 1985, depending on estimated price support purchases by CCC for the 12-month period beginning on that date."

The price support program for milk is carried out through CCC purchases of butter, cheese and nonfat dry milk. The CCC purchase prices for these dairy products will be adjusted on April 1 to reflect the lower support price. In calculating the new purchase prices for butter and nonfat dry milk, the reduction in the support price for milk used in making these products is allocated entirely to nonfat dry milk. Also, a single nationwide purchase is established for butter. The purchase prices for cheese will reflect a projected net return for whey solids-not-fat. The differential between the purchase prices for barrel and block cheese has been increased from 3.0 cents to 4.25 cents per pound.

The manufacturing allowances used to calculate the new purchase prices are unchanged. CCC-owned dairy products will continue to be offered for sale for unrestricted use at prices about 10 percent above the newly established purchase prices.

The prices that CCC will pay for dairy products are shown below.

	Products Produced before April 1, 1985 and Graded and Offered by April 15, 1985	Products Produced on or after April 1, 1985 or not Graded and Offered prior to April 15, 1985

The price of butter located at any other point outside these cities will be the price at New York City minus 80 percent of the lowest domestic railroad through freight rate for frozen butter in effect on October 1 of each marketing year from such other point to New York City. The appropriate freight rate will be calculated on a per pound gross weight basis for a 60,000-pound carlot. However, the price at any location shall be not less than the purchase price at New York minus 3 cents per pound. Maryland plans vet tech tests

ANNAPOLIS, Md. – On May 28, 1985, the State Board of Veterinary Medical Examiners will administer the State Veterinary Technician Examination for candidates wishing to become certified as a Registered Veterinary Technician. The exam will be given at Essex Community College, Room 101, Math/Science Building, in Baltimore County.

The new certification program for veterinary technicians was created by recent legislation which requires the State Board of Veterinary Medical Examiners to evaluate, examine, and determine the qualifications for applicants for registration as a Veterinary Technician.

The Board, through its Veterinary Technician Committee, has adopted regulations that describe the qualifications for examination and registration of Veterinary Technicians.

Applications must be received by the State Board of Veterinary Medical Examiners at the Maryland Department of Agriculture, 50 Harry S. Truman Parkway, Annapolis, Maryland, 21401 by April 28.

Examination application forms may be obtained by writing or by calling (301) 841-5862. More information about the program can be obtained by contacting the Board.

in a fair way," states Read. "Workers may have bona fide reasons to make a complaint. They have a right to be heard."

Read also says the earlier a case is resolved, the less costly it is. He sometimes sees patterns of problems with a particular crew leader or grower repeatedly figuring in complaints. He feels it is necessary to see if a problem can be prevented in the future. If a complaint should go to litigation, the grower may also want to have a different attorney than his crew leader.

"Do not take it as a reflection against you if a worker goes to an outside person such as a priest or a spokeperson for Legal Services, for advice," says Read. "They may do so because of a language problem."

East meets West ... on Lancaster County dairy farms

LANCASTER — Three high-ranking Russian agriculture officials toured three southeastern Pennsylvania farms on Wednesday as part of an attempt to renew scientific and technical exchanges between the U.S. and the Soviet Union.

The Soviet officials, who hold positions roughly equivalent to an agency head in this country's Department of Agriculture, toured the dairy operations at Triple G Farms outside of Denver, Len-Lyn Farms in Schoeneck, and the swine farm of Wilbur Lutz, Sinking Spring, Berks County.

And, whereas the Russians were reportedly not impressed with an earlier trip to U.S. research facilities, they were said to be pleased with their reception at the farms they visited.

Dr. Alexander Konygin, head of the Soviet agency in charge of international agricultural relations, said he was most impressed with the "farm to table" operation at Triple G.

Arthur, Steve, and Doug Graybill, members of the Triple G operation, conducted the tour of their facilities, taking them through the free stall barn, dry cow housing, heifer raising areas, and the double-eight milking parlor.

Then the group was lead through Triple G's milk processing plant, which prepares milk for sale in the Triple G market next door. The Soviets expressed interest in the U.S. trend to market whole, 2 percent, skim, and chocolate milk.

At Galen Crouse's Len-Lyn Farms, the Soviet visitors were particularly curious about Crouse's use of embryo transfer in his Holstein herd.

Konygin expressed particular surprise when told one cow in the Len-Lyn herd which has a phenomenal 4.8 percent test and 26,000 pounds milk. Crouse has a rolling herd average of 18,500 pounds milk and 700 fat.

The Soviet officials were well-read on the extensive use of embryo transfers in top U.S. Holstein herds. They recorded the production records of some of Galen Crouse's top cows as they toured the Len Lyn barn.

Dr. Aleksandr Konygin, department chief for international programs in the Soviet department of agriculture, asked some specific questions about dairy nutrition during his visit to Triple-G Farms, Denver. Here, Konygin examines the feed and milk replacer that Steve Graybill, right, feeds the Triple G calves. Lancaster County Extension Agent Jay Irwin, center, looks on.

The three Soviet agriculturalists carefully took notes as Galen Crouse explained the embryo transfer work that he has conducted with his Len Lyn herd.

Doug Graybill, left, explains the milk processing plant to the Soviet visitors. The farm to market operation was particularly interesting to the agriculturalists.

Auction to raise money for Dauphin County Ag Center

HARRISBURG — The future Dauphin County Agriculture and Natural Resources Center is the theme for a consignment auction being held today at the Gratz Fairgrounds.

The auction is part of a project to raise half of the $500,000 needed to construct the Dauphin County Agriculture and Natural Resources Center. The Dauphin County board of commissioners has already committed $250,000 for the construction of the Center to be located at the intersection of Routes 325 and 225 in Middle Paxton Township.

According to Merv Adams, member of the auction committee, "Farm tractors, tillage, planting, harvesting and numerous other pieces of farm equipment will be available at the auction."

Items of interest to land and homeowners include hardware, small tools, plumbing and building materials, chain saws, and lawn and garden tractors. Other items include hay and straw, field lime, 2-4 yard lots of premixed concrete, and three ten ton loads of stone.

Adams further stated, "The auction will have items of interest to farmers, landowners, and homeowners."

Ron Kopp, also a member of the auction committee, stated that "All of the equipment and items are being sold on consignment or have been donated to the auction on behalf of the fund raising effort for the Ag Center." He further added, "The overall interest in the auction and the future Center has been tremendous."

The auction will start at 9:30 a.m. on Saturday, April 13th, at the Gratz Fairgrounds, Route 25, in Gratz. Refreshments will be available at the auction.

ADA/DC milk ads hold up under evaluation

WILLIAMSPORT – Since January, the American Dairy Association and Dairy Council has been running television ads for fluid milk using the theme, "Milk. America's Health Kick." With the heavy investments being made into advertising by dairy producers, there is a concern over whether the ads are effective. New results from consumer testing are positive, showing the "Health Kick" ads to be highly effective.

All ads run by the ADA/DC are continually tested by the United Dairy Industry Association's Marketing and Economic Research Department. The testing takes place at four regional test sites around the country. The audience is invited into a theatre under the guise of watching a television pilot program. Advertisements are shown during breaks in the programming, and the audience is later asked to recall what commercials they saw.

Consumer reactions to milk ads are measured through this process. Four different areas are measured including: whether the ad creates an awareness of milk; the ability of the ad to communicate its message; viewer reaction to the ad; and the degree to which consumers are persuaded to drink milk.

The test results of the new "Health Kick" ads have been compared to scores of competitive beverage ads. The milk ads have scored as much as 30 points above the norm for a typical beverage ad. They are especially strong in the "Awareness" and "Communication of Message" areas.

ADA/DC is placing fluid milk ads throughout the Federal Order 2 milk marketing area. The ad campaigns being used by ADA/DC are also being used by the National Dairy Board (NDB). Therefore, all ads purchased locally by ADA/DC dairy producers are strongly reinforced and complemented by NDB's national media buys.

For example, ADA/DC will invest $230,000 into media advertising during 1985 in the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre marketing area. During this same time period, the network buys being made by NDB will be worth an additional $425,000 worth of advertising in the Scranton/Wilkes-Barre area. By using the same ad programs, ADA/DC and the NDB are able to bring the consumer a strong, unified message.

Pennsylvania dairy producers are encouraged to learn more about their milk advertising program. ADA/DC has speakers available to appear before groups and at meetings. Anyone interested should call ADA/DC's Williamsport office at (717) 323-2552, or dial tollfree from Pennsylvania 1-800-HOT-MILK.

ADA/DC is a dairy farmer funded and directed milk promotion agency serving Federal Order 2 producers in Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey.

Wool, mohair payments set

WASHINGTON – Sheep producers will receive about $90 million in federal incentive payments on wool and lambs they sold in 1984, while mohair producers will receive about $10 million, according to Everett Rank, administrator of the USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

The 1984 national average market price for shorn wool was 79.5 cents a pound, 85.5 cents less than the $1.65 per pound support price, Rank said. Dividing the difference (85.5 cents) by the average market price (79.5 cents) results in a 1984 payment rate of 107.5 percent, compared with a payment rate of 149.6 percent in 1983, he said. The payment rate is the amount required to bring the average price received by all producers up to the support price.

For mohair, the 1984 average market price was $4.30 and support price $5.169, making the payment rate 20.2 percent, compared to 14.2 percent in 1983, Rank said.

The wool and mohair programs encourage the production of higher quality fibers because the more producers receive from sales, the more they receive in government incentive payments. Producers' payments are determined by multiplying the payment rates (107.6 and 20.2 percent) times the net dollar return received by producers from wool and mohair sales.

Producers will receive $3.42 per hundredweight in federal payments for unshorn lambs they sold or slaughtered in 1984. This payment is to compensate growers for wool on live lambs they marketed. The payment is based on the shorn wool payment rate, the average weight of wool per hundredweight of lambs and the price of lamb's wool relative to the national average price for shorn wool, Rank said.

XXX

Nearly five billion pounds of cheese were manufactured in the United States in 1983. More than a third of the cheese (1,728,332,000 pounds) was produced in Wisconsin. Minnesota, New York, California and Iowa were the next largest producers of cheese with totals ranging from 587 million pounds down to 220 million pounds. Five other states (Idaho, Illinois, Missouri, Pennsylvania and South Dakota) each produced at least 100 million pounds of cheese in 1983.

Budget cutbacks force Delmarva Extension Service to ax four jobs

NEWARK, DE – Faced with a 23 percent loss in federal funding for the 1985-86 fiscal year, the Delaware Cooperative Extension Service has notified three specialists and one county agent that their positions are likely to be terminated.

So far, extension director Dr. Richard E. Fowler says he has spoken with the state integrated pest management specialist, farm safety specialist, a specialist with the Expanded Food and Nutrition Program (EFNEP), and a county 4-H agent. Other positions may also be affected before the belt-tightening is completed.

Fowler says the terminations will probably be necessary because of President Reagan's proposed budget which calls for elimination of all mandated 3(d) programs under the Smith-Lever Act, the congressional act through which the extension service exists.

In addition, the president's budget calls for no funding increases for regular extension programs, including 4-H. "This has caused us to reorder our priorities within the state," Fowler says. "The unpleasant part of this process is that it affects people's careers and their lives."

Though the proposed budget is still being debated in Congress, Fowler says that as extension director he must operate on the assumption that funds for the coming fiscal year will be reduced. What concerns him most is the size of the proposed cuts.

"We need to be a part of the deficit reduction process," the director says, "but the extension service should not be treated differently from anyone else. I feel we will have been singled out rather heavily if they cut the 23 percent that's been indicated at the federal level."

In addition to its other programs, the Delaware Cooperative Extension Service participates in Smith-Lever 3(d) programs: farm safety, integrated pest management (IPM), pesticide impact assessment, and expanded food and nutrition.

These programs benefit Delaware residents in many ways. For example, during 1984, apple and cabbage producers who participated in extension IPM projects saved approximately $44,000 in reduced insecticide sprays by basing pest control measures on the findings of field scouts. Field corn, soybeans, sweet corn, potatoes and peppers are other Delaware crops which benefit from practices introduced by the state extension IPM specialist.

Over the past five years, farm accidents in Delaware have declined 28 percent–from one accident for every five farms to one for every seven. This translates into savings of $146,000 per year, as well as lives saved and reduced human suffering. Over 3,000 people were involved in the extension pesticide safety program during 1984 alone.

As the result of leadership development programs conducted by Delaware's 4-H extension personnel, last year 937 volunteers worked directly with 3,329 young people in 4-H clubs and special interest groups. An additional 11,312 youth were involved in 4-H school enrichment programs. Current studies indicate that the average extension volunteer's time is worth more than $500 a year, making this a $468,000 contribution to the youth of Delaware.

Last year 879 homemakers and 2,370 youth participated in extension nutrition programs conducted through the Expanded Food and Nutrition Program, which is designed to teach low-income citizens about nutrition and help them improve their eating habits.

Bucks/Montgomery Guernsey breeders meet

MILFORD SQUARE – The Bucks/Montgomery County Guernsey Breeders' Association recently held its annual banquet and business meeting at the Milford Square Fire Company. Speaker for the more than 100 guests at the meeting was Pennsylvania Guernsey Breeders' Association business manager, Lee Yost. He discussed the old and new issues facing the state Guernsey breeders.

Several guests were recognized during the meeting. Cara Smith and Miss Wolfgang each received a present for successfully completing their 1984 4-H projects.

Joe Way, Montgomery County Extension, presented outstanding 1984 milk production awards to Richard and Victoria Smith, New Hope. A cow from the Smith herd averaged 23,000 pounds milk, placing third in the state.

Kitty Kopistecki, Montgomery County Dairy Princess, reminded all the guests of the importance of daily consumption of milk to healthy bodies.

The Bucks/Montgomery County Association expressed special thanks to all the members, community businesses, and guests that supported and attended the annual meeting.

USDA sets loan, purchase rates for honey

WASHINGTON – Honey producers will receive average loan and purchase rates of 65.3 cents per pound on their 1985 production, 0.5 cent below the 1984 level, Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block said.

Block said the price support rates represent 60 percent of the April 1985 adjusted parity price of 1.087 cents per pound, the minimum required under legislation. Extracted honey loan and purchase rates will range from 68.5 cents to 53.5 cents per pound, depending on color and class.

The rates, which apply to extracted honey in 60-pound or larger containers, are white or lighter, 68.5 cents per pound; extra light amber, 64.5; light amber, 59.5; and other table and nontable honey, 53.5.

Loans and purchases will be offered on 1985-crop honey in eligible containers, on or off farms, Block said. Producers have until January 31, 1986, to request loans that will mature April 30, 1986.

comprised of PDA, Extension,and PRV committee personnel, as well as the producer's veterinarian would analyze the situation and make recommendations. And indemnity rates would have to be agreeable to the PRV committee, and the Pa. Pork Producers Council as well as the Department of Agriculture.

To guard against bringing more infection across state lines, out-of-state feeder pigs would have to originate from PRV-free herds.

Hutchinson noted that a similar ongoing program in Marshall County, Iowa has produced encouraging results. Starting with about the same number of infected herds that are found here, he said, Iowa has eradicated the virus in all but four herds.

But not all producers present at the meeting were sold on the idea. "All this testing and retesting is just cutting the tail off a little at a time," declared one producer who predicted that the outcome would be the gradual culling of entire herds with no remuneration for the farmer.

Which brings up what many producers feel to be the program's major weak link: no provision for indemnity. With no concrete indemnity program on paper, producers are reluctant to give the nod to any program involving depopulation.

If, in fact, the disease is serious enough to warrant depopulation, then it's serious enough to warrant an indemnity program, say many hog farmers, pointing to the flood of more than $60 million in federal funding that poured into the state during the Avian influenza epidemic.

But despite its impact among Midwest hog producers, and the relatively small number of Lancaster County farmers who have had to cope with it, PRV remains obscure throughout most of the state, notes Hutchinson. Rearing its head in the eastern part of the county in 1980, the virus leapfrogged to the northwestern area, and has remained primarily a Lancaster County problem.

Combine PRV's small geographic distribution here with its highly variable identity, (symptoms run the gamut from no visible evidence to abortion and and dead nursery stock) and it's little wonder that legislators are reluctant to dip into the kitty.

"I'd have never known I had it (PRV) if the hogs hadn't been in with the steers, and the steers started dying," pointed out one producer. And Hutchinson concurs, acknowledging that at times the virus seems to ignore swine while quickly killing other animals such as beef cattle and cats. But this, he maintains, is another good reason for PRV eradication.

But when the virus chooses to single out the swine herd, the results can be devastating, Hutchinson adds. The biggest losses are seen among baby pigs and pregnant sows that abort their litters.

But even if the virus fails to kill pigs, Manheim producer Mark Nestleroth emphasized that it has plenty of other costly effects.

"My pigs ended up growing slower than ever before,(after infection) and we saw more arthritis and more coughing." He also noted that carcass problems such as abscesses increased, resulting in more condemnations at slaughter.

However, since some producers have experienced none of the above problems, they remain willing to live with the disease as long as no money is available for eradication.

Hutchinson indicated that the best way to convince the state to pitch in, is to have producers meet them halfway, in the form of a checkoff program or something similar. But with hog prices hovering at the 42-cent level, producers themselves are also reluctant to open their wallets.

The veterinarian predicts that the current stop-gap eradication program may be adopted by the Bureau, with indemnity negotiations between producers, agricultural organizations and the state continuing.

Large operator or small, if you're a hog farmer, the pseudorabies committee wants to know what you think of the latest eradication program.

Please review the following proposal and contact your local Pork Council representative, or call committee chairman John Henkel in Strasburg, 717-786-2562.

Proposed PRV Eradication Program

SURVEILANCE

High Risk Area - To include random sampling testing of 10-30 head per unit, on the farm or at slaughter with all swine being correctly identified.

Low Risk Area - To include random sampling throughout Pennsylvania with every slaughter plant involved. This includes good identification practices with sampling by state personnel or state appointed personnel.

POSITIVE HERDS

Herd owners will have options for clean-up and eradication of PRV. A concentrated effort will be made for containment of the disease. Consultation will be made from a team of representatives of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture, Cooperative Extension Service, The PRV Committee and the producer's veterinarian to aid in choosing and implementing one of the following options. For any option, there will be a designated time limit. The consultation team will evaluate the success of each farm plan at the time limit or sooner if necessary.

A. Test and Removal of Seropositive pigs

– for low incidence herds only (less than 20% positive).

– retest every 30 days entire breeding herd and replacement gilts.

B. Offspring Segregation with or without controlled vaccination – vaccination with approved vaccine of breeding herd and progeny to halt or prevent outbreaks.

– replacement gilts raised in segregated facility and tested by 5½ to 6 months.

– seropositives are promptly removed and retesting done in 60 days or sell entire replacement group and start over.

C. Depopulation

1) Voluntary Depopulation without indemnity.

2) Depopulation with indemnity. There shall be no forced depopulation without reasonable indemnity. The amount of indemnity and conditions for indemnification must be jointly approved by the Pennsylvania PRV Committee, the Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council and the Pennsylvania Bureau of Animal Industry.

3) Shipping permits will continue to be issued pending indemnification.

VACCINATION USES

Controlled, limited duration use of killed PRV vaccine would be permitted with the following criteria:

1) Authorized only through the Pennsylvania Bureau of Animal Industry.

2) Use in quarantined PRV herds only.

3) Vaccinated swine would be permanently identified.

FEEDER PIGS

Out of state feeder pigs must originate in herds negative on representative sampling for pseudorabies of breeding herd.

MARKETING

Hogs from quarantined herds will be moved only to slaughter. Individual and/or blanket permits will be issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Energy Center offers free energy efficiency surveys

The PA Energy Center for Region VP is offering free energy efficiency surveys to businesses, industries, non-profit organizations, farmers, local governments, and multi-unit residential building owners.

The Energy Survey is a walk-through review of the energy conservation characteristics of a building.

Conducted by a trained energy efficiency engineer, the Energy Survey will assess heating and cooling systems, lighting patterns, hot water usage, the building envelope and many other areas where energy dollars may be saved.

Following the walk-through survey, the energy efficiency engineer will prepare a written report that details the findings of the survey. The report will recommend improvements that may be made and the corresponding savings that will result.

The Energy Efficiency Survey program is one of many services offered by the PA Energy Center. Since mid-1981, the Energy Center has conducted over 3,000 Energy Surveys. Client response to these surveys has indicated that over $1.7 million in energy costs was saved through this period.

The PA Energy Center, Region VI is one of nine regional Centers established by the Governor's Energy council to provide local sources of unbiased energy conservation information and advice to area residents.

The Region VI office is located at Shippensburg University and serves consumers in Adams, Berks, Cumberland, Dauphin, Franklin, Lancaster, Lebanon, Perry, and York counties. Funding for this free service comes from the U.S. Department of Energy and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

To obtain more information, or to request a free survey, write the PA Energy Center for Region VI, 201 Gilbert Hall, Shippensburg University, Shippensburg, PA 17257, or call toll free, 1-800-692-7312.

County RCMA representatives appointed

HARRISBURG — The Pennsylvania State Grange and Pennsylvania Farmers Union have announced the appointment of local representatives in 12 counties to promote membership in the Regional Cooperative Marketing Agency (RCMA). RCMA is a cooperative formed to negotiate over-order prices for dairy producers.

The two farm organizations have been conducting meetings for dairy farmers across the state to explain the value of belonging to the cooperative. RCMA was first formed in New England in the mid-1970's to negotiate over-order prices for fluid milk for its members. The cooperative was successful in obtaining higher prices ranging from 3 to 85 cents per hundredweight.

RCMA was recently reactivated due to growing concern throughout the Northeast about declining milk prices and the uncertainty about the future of the federal dairy price support program.

State Grange Master Charles Wismer has pointed out that another drop in the milk support price this year will bring the price down to the level it was in 1979. "Production costs and the overall cost of living have increased 3-4 percent every year," he said.

In addition, federal order prices have dropped from January to May of this year. The price announced for Order 4 in May dropped 77 cents from January, he said.

"Dairy farmers must take action if they are going to get a better price for their milk," said Wismer. "Producers have a chance to help themselves by joining RCMA and working together to improve milk prices."

There are no dues to belong to RCMA. Normal operating costs are deducted from the over-order premium which RCMA collects from the handler and returns to the farmers. In the past, this deduction never exceeded one-half cent per hundredweight.

Farmers who join RCMA would receive the over-order price from RCMA, but they would continue to receive their milk checks at the federal order price from their buying handler.

In order to succeed, RCMA must have control over a major portion of the milk market. The cooperative's goal is to sign up 95 percent of all milk producers from Maine to Virginia. A number of major dairy cooperatives serving Pennsylvania have joined the effort, including Dairylea, Lehigh Valley and Eastern Milk Producers.

For further information about RCMA or to join, dairy farmers should contact the RCMA representative in their county listed below, or call the State Grange at 1-800-242-9661, or Farmers Union at 1-800-932-4629.

Maryland extension offers pest program in 2 counties

HAGERSTOWN, Md. — The University of Maryland Extension Service is initiating an Integrated Pest Management (IPM) program in Washington and Frederick counties.

Pest Management is one of the most important aspects of producing field crops. Insects, weed and disease infestations have the potential to be not only damaging to the crop, but expensive to the farmer.

Many farmers do not have the time to check all of their fields for pest problems. Further, few farmers know at what level of infestation an insect or weed problem will cause economic loss.

These situations encourage farmers to treat fields with preventative pesticide measures which can result in placing unneeded chemicals on the fields, increasing pest resistance to chemical control, and it may be in unnecessary expense.

The IPM Program is designed to demonstrate to farmers the economy of scouting to insure better pest management practices.

The program works like this: The farmer can enroll alfalfa, corn, small grain or soybean fields. He pays $4.25 per acre for alfalfa, $3.00 for corn, $2.75 for soybeans and $1.50 for small grains.

Crop pest scouts, trained by the University of Maryland Pest Control Specialists, start checking alfalfa fields in early April, primarily for alfalfa weevil.

Corn and soybeans are scouted as the plants emerge to count stands, check for insects and post-emergence weeds. Small grains are scouted for cereal leaf beetle, aphids and armyworm.

Scouting reports are made to the farmer, Extension Agent, and the University specialists. Pest control recommendations are made by the County Agent or the Pest Control Specialists.

IPM is not a new concept. It has been used successfully throughout the country on many crops. In Maryland alone, thousands of acres of crops are scouted each year saving producers money, time and worry.

If you are interested in enrolling acreage in this program, or if you would like more details, contact your County Extension Office

ASA chief asks Congress to reverse cargo ruling

ST. LOUIS — The American Soybean Association (ASA)'s chief executive today joined members of Congress in calling for action to reverse a court ruling that threatens U.S. farm exports.

Dr. Kenneth L. Bader said a recent court decision applying "cargo preference" laws to a successful export promotion program would make it harder for American farmers to make overseas sales.

Besides being chief executive for ASA, Bader is chairman of the National Commission on Agricultural Trade and Export Policy, created by Congress last year to find ways of improving U.S. farm exports.

The Commission today sent a letter to President Reagan and Congressional leaders endorsing legislation to exempt agricultural commodities from cargo preference. Bader appeared at a Capitol news conference with Senators and Congressmen who support similar legislation.

Besides Bader, speakers at the news conference included Senators Rudy Boschwitz (R-MN), David Boren (D-OK), Max Baucus (D-MT), and Don Nickles (R-OK), and Reps. Virginia Smith (R-NE), Glenn English (D-OK) and Pat Roberts (R-KS).

"A federal judge has ordered the Agricultural Department to use expensive U.S.-flag ships for half the cargoes under USDA's blended credit program," said ASA Chief Executive Officer Kenneth Bader. "And that means the blended credit program is dead."

Cargo preference laws require half of government-generated cargoes to be shipped on American vessels. The law is intended to subsidize the U.S. merchant fleet by giving it business, since U.S.-flag bulk carriers almost always charge substantially higher rates than foreign-flag vessels. The main reason, most observers agree, is higher labor costs on American ships.

A February 21 court ruling required USDA to apply cargo preference to its blended credit sales. Under this program, government guarantees of commercial loans are "blended" with direct, interest-free government credit to lower the effective interest rate for buyers of U.S. farm products.

The opinion in the court case said that the government guarantees, even more widely used than blended credit, should themselves be subject to cargo preference. That finding did not have the force of law because the court case concerned only blended credit, but it was an open invitation to a second suit that would apply cargo preference to credit guarantees, ASA officials said.

Traditionally, the government's Food for Peace (P.L. 480) program has been subject to cargo preference, but programs like blended credit which simply facilitate commercial sales have not been.

"The question is not whether this country ought to subsidize its merchant fleet," Bader said. "Maybe it should. But why should the subsidies come at the expense of farmers' export sales, at a time when farmers are going broke in record numbers and the government keeps saying it wants to increase exports? It just doesn't make sense."

The added costs of shipping on U.S.-flag vessels would make U.S. commodities more expensive for countries now using USDA credit guarantees. Since the strong U.S. dollar has already made American farm goods overpriced, many overseas customers would simply go elsewhere to buy what they need, Bader said.

"Our export credt programs have kept U.S. farm exports moving even though we're not selling as much as we did a few years ago," Bader said. "But this court ruling, if it stands, will increase shipping costs so much that the credit programs won't be attractive any more–and there are plenty of foreign competitors out there waiting to pick up the business."

The solution, Bader said, is immediate legislative action to reverse the court ruling. At the same time, he added, Congress should increase the effectivenesas of the P.L. 480 program by exempting it from cargo preference requirements. If, in fact, we need a strong merchant marine for defense, then put it in the Defense Department budget, not on the backs of American Agriculture.

"We're always told that national security requires a strong merchant fleet," Bader said. "And that may well be true. But if it is, why should it be the business of the Agriculture Department to bear the cost? It's time for some truth in budgeting–let's be honest about where the money's going."

Winners named in PSU dairy judging contest

UNIVERSITY PARK – Nearly 250 high school and university students from all parts of Pennsylvania competed for honors last week in Penn State's dairy judging contest.

The contest for 4-H and FFA teams and Penn State students was the opening event in the 60th annual Dairy Exposition, a series of contests and demonstrations that will conclude with Showday in the Ag Arena on April 27. Contestants in the judging contest placed several types of dairy cattle into classes based on physical characteristics.

Penn State alumni with an interest in dairy served as judges for place classes and scored "oral reasons," which are presentations detailing why cattle are placed in specific classes.

Winners in the 4-H Division

- The Lancaster County 4-H team (Donald Welk, Bob Barley and Tom Barley) was the overall 4-H winner. The team also captured first place for oral reasons.
- The Lebanon "A" team (Dale Balmer, Mike Kunkle, Nelson Bangardin and Matt Hatrich) placed second in overall competition.
- The Potter County 4-H team (Jeff Perrung, Ken Smoker, Don Gilliland and Leo Cornell) placed second for oral reasons.
- Donald Welk, of the Lancaster County 4-H team, won highest individual honors for both placing and oral "reasons."

Winners in the FFA Competition

- The Solanco High School "A" team of Quarryville (Joe Delong, Kris Ebenshade, Dave Mull and Tom Wiker) took first place honors in the overall competition and in "oral reasons."
- Tulpehocken High School FFA (Troy Koenig, Doris Stump and Gary Bicksler) captured second place overall.
- The Cloister High School "A" team (Dave Eby, John Fox, Jim Zimmerman and John Gerhart) took second in "oral reasons."
- Joe Delong, of the Solanco High School team, captured overall winner and first in the FFA division.

Professional Collegiate Division Winners

- Mike L. Fair, a junior majoring in agriculture from Lebanon, placed first in overall competition.
- Lisa A. Francisco, a freshman in the Division of Undergraduate Studies from Lafayette, New Jersey, placed second.
- Claudia Lynn Rowe, a junior majoring in agriculture from Gilbertsville, New York, placed first in "oral reasons."
- William W. Lesher, a freshman majoring in agricultural business from Bernville, captured second in oral reasons.

Amateur Collegiate Division Winners

- Brent Rou McMillen, a sophomore majoring in engineering from Loysville, placed first.
- Louise M. Moir, a senior majoring in food science from Penn State College captured second place.

The Dairy Expo is sponsored each year by the Dairy Science Club in the College of Agriculture at Penn State. The public is invited to attend Showday events on April 27 from 9:00 to 4:00 in the Ag Arena on Park Street Extension opposite Beaver Stadium. For more information, call 863-4205.

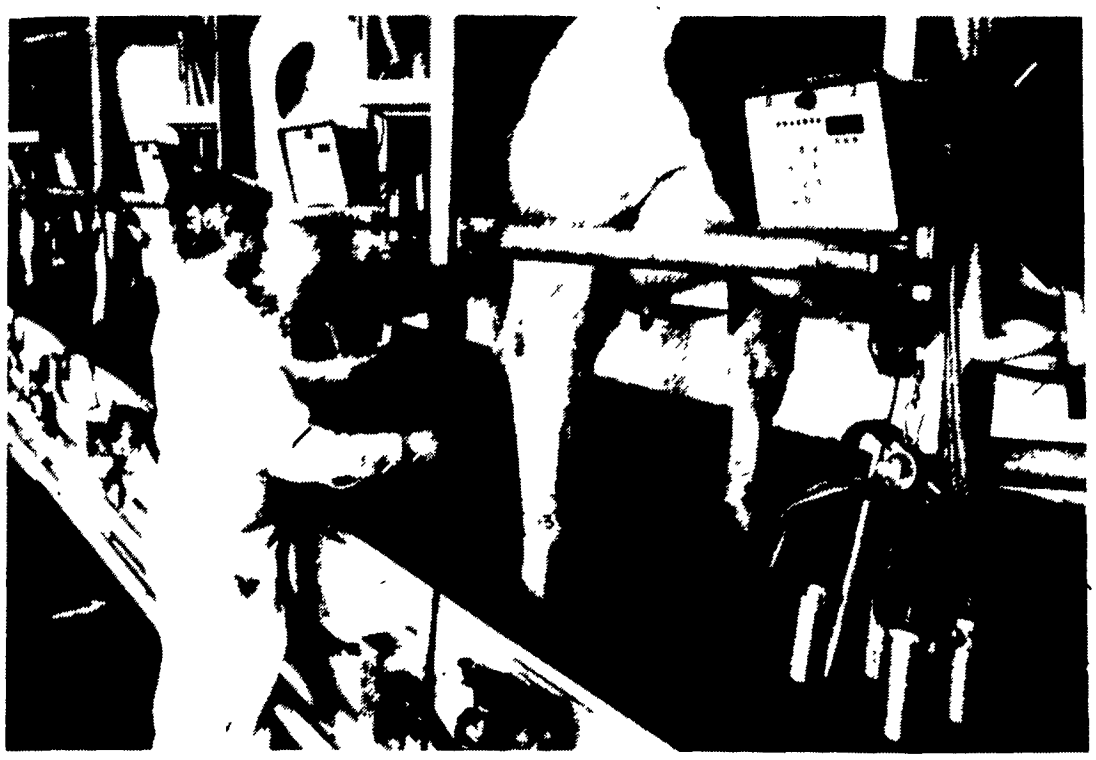
Computerized milking system unveiled



Wallace Earl Stoner, herdsperson, uses the new electronic milking and feeding system recently installed by the University of Delaware Agricultural Experiment Station. A transponder on each cow automatically identifies her in the milking parlor, controls her access to feed supplements and provides a continuous record of her performance and activity.

According to Extension dairy specialist Dr. George Haenlein, the new system features the latest technology in electronic milk metering, milker back-flushing, automatic milker take-off, milk precooling and milk monitoring. Flashing signal lights in the milking parlor tell personnel if a cow has been treated, if her milk shows signs of mastitis, if she is off feed, or if she is coming into estrus.

"Positive identification of the cows is the key to a whole new step forward in dairy production," says Haenlein. The overall advantages of an identification system are higher efficiency in milk production and better milk qualities, including less contamination of the product, he adds.

Corn, sorghum payments to total $1.7 billion

GREEN BAY, WI. — Eligible corn and sorghum producers will receive an estimated $1.7 billion in deficiency payments for their 1984 crops, Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block said.

Most of the 760,000 deficiency payment checks should be in farmers' hands between April 10 and 15, Secretary Block said. Corn producers will receive about $1.55 billion and sorghum producers around $150 million, he said.

Deficiency payment rates are calculated as the differences between an established target price and the higher of the price support loan rate, or the national average price received by farmers during the first five months of the marketing year. For corn and sorghum, the first five months of the marketing year are October through February.

National weighted average market prices for the first five months of the marketing year are $2.60 per bushel for corn and $2.30 per bushel for sorghum.

Eligible corn producers will be paid a deficiency payment rate of 43 cents per bushel for their 1984 crop, based on the difference between the $3.03 target price and the $2.60 farm price.

The eligible sorghum producers' deficiency payment rate will be 46 cents per bushel, based on the difference between the $2.88 target price and the $2.42 loan rate.

Producers can estimate their individual deficiency payments by multiplying their planted acreage times their farm program yield times the deficiency payment rate.

For example, a corn producer who planted 100 acres in the program and had a farm program yield of 100 bushels per acre would receive a deficiency payment of $4,300 (100 acres x 100 bushels x 43 cents per bushel).

Rank said payments will be issued through local ABCS offices.

USDA unveils new storage loan program

WASHINGTON — Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block announced today that producers with mature or maturing Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) farmer-owned grain reserve loans will be given the opportunity to repledge the collateral under a new Special Producer Storage Loan Program.

The new program will permit producers to maintain control of their grain and earn storage payments on it instead of being required to repay the loan or forfeit the grain to CCC. It will become effective upon publication of the regulations providing for its terms and conditions.

Today's announcement applies to all reserve grains stored on farms and in commercial warehouses.

"Advance storage payments for grain pledged as security for the new loans will be made to producers by CCC at the same storage rate which is applicable to the farmer-owned reserve program," Block said. "Interest will be charged on the new loans at the rate in effect when the new loan is obtained."

Block said roducers may repay the new loans any time during the loan period without penalty. However, the loans will mature in 12 months or upon demand by CCC during the loan period.

Producers interested in obtaining a loan under the new Special Producer Storage Loan Program should contact their local Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service office for details.

CCC sells butter to Egypt

GREEN BAY, WI. — The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) has signed another contract with Egypt for the sale of an additional 6,000 metric tons of butter, Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block said. The additional 6,000 tons is valued at $7.05 million, bringing the total value of the recent sales to $54.85 million.

Last December, CCC sold Egypt 35,000 metric tons of butter, butteroil and cheese valued at $47.8 million.

Block said sales of dairy products to Egypt since last December now total 21,000 tons of butter, 15,000 tons of cheese, and 5,000 tons of processed cheese. The first shipments of butter and butteroil will begin the last of April 1985.

CCC sold the additional 6,000 tons of butter, part of its surplus inventory acquired under CCC's dairy price support program, for $1,175 per ton delivered f.a.s. at U.S. ports of export. As of March 22, CCC had 134 million pounds of uncommitted butter in its inventory.

Dairy Policy Options for 1985: Cost-Pricing

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third in a series of nine articles about dairy policy options for 1985. Compiled by Jack Kirkland and Blair Smith, Extension ag economists at Penn State, the articles are written by a variety of national authorities on dairy policy issues.

We are printing these articles to help you better understand and evaluate the policies and programs the dairy industry faces, and to help you take a more effective stand for the program you choose to support as the 1985 Farm Bill is formulated.

BY HAL HARRIS
CLEMSON UNIVERSITY

"If only I could be guaranteed my cost of production plus a reasonable profit," is a statement often heard at meetings of dairymen and farmers in general. This philosophy and problems with the traditional price support mechanism have led to proposals to adjust the support price by means of a revised parity formula or actual changes in production costs. Such proposals may be referred to as "cost-pricing."

What is cost-pricing?

The underlying notion of cost-pricing-prices that move in general concert with costs-is economically and philsophically appealing. Of course, a number of factors other than cost of production affect the appropriate price level at any given time. But this does not mean that cost pricing could not be adopted as the basic support price mover.

The USDA has used the cost-pricing concept to make annual changes in target prices for feed grains and wheat. To a degree, some state controlled milk markets use the mechanism today. State milk agencies that use the public hearing process consider testimony on the cost of producing milk. States such as California, Virginia, and North and South Carolina use economic formulas to adjust prices paid producers. Key factors such as feed costs and labor costs are more heavily weighed in these formulas.

If the underlying goals of the support price program are to provide an income "safety net" for dairy farmers and a degree of stability, cost-pricing may have a lot to offer. However, if the goal is to provide a "fair return," then the procedures for putting such a mechanism into place become more complex, and the consequences more cloudy.

Alternative mechanisms for implementing cost-pricing

There are two cost-pricing mechanisms that have been widely discussed in recent years; dairy parity and actual cost of production (COP).

Cost of Production. In 1973, Congress mandated that the USDA study, and annually update, the costs of producing milk and major field crops. The idea was that these cost estimates could be used to set the level of price supports for farmers.

There are a number of questions that can and should be raised about what costs are included in any cost of production estimate and how they are measured. Perhaps the most important questions concern the treatment of family labor, management, capital, and home-raised feed costs.

There is no reason why COP could not be used as an adjustment mechanism. The changes in cost from year to year are fairly consistent using different estimating techniques, and changes in costs tend to move together for different herd sizes and regions of the country.

Dairy Parity. Under the traditional parity procedure, changes in the support price are based on changes in a general index of prices paid by farmers relative to a general index of prices received by farmers. The dairy parity approach simply relates the support price to an index of prices paid by dairy farmers to produce milk. In other words, the prices received measure is dropped and the prices paid index is tailored to reflect milk production specifically, as opposed to all agricultural production.

The components included in a dairy parity index and their relative weights would likely be based on cost of production surveys, as is currently the case for USDA's prices paid indices. Even with that guideline, important decisions must be made about what should be included in the index and how much each item should be weighted. A key factor would be whether or not some allowance for family living costs should be included or whether only the prices of purchased inputs used directly to produce milk should be used in the index.

The former case is consistent with the historic method except the formula would more accurately reflect dairy cost changes. In the latter alternative, dairy parity is more similar to COP where estimates of the value of family labor and capital are not included.

Conditions fostering consideration of cost-pricing

Compared to some other alternatives, cost-pricing is a less radical change to the current price support systems. Yet, if implemented properly, it could provide an income floor for producers and reduce the possibility of amassing large surpluses in the future. Cost-pricing combined with secretarial discretion and/or supply-demand adjusters (see next week's article) could be even more effective in balancing production and consumption.

The roots of current problems lie in the parity formula which was used as the support price mover until 1981. The all agriculture parity formula no longer adequately reflects conditions in the dairy sector. The 75 to 90 percent of parity range authorized in 1949 sufficed for 30 years. But the 80 percent minimum mandated in the 1977 Farm Bill did not allow sufficient latitude. This triggered overproduction in the late 1970's, a condition which persists today.

Parity could still conceivably be used as a price adjuster, perhaps with a discretionary range of 45 to 65 percent. But most believe that it would be better to abandon this mechanism. Perhaps use of cost-pricing program would "fine tune" a program that worked quite well for 30 years.

Consequences of cost-pricing

Cost-pricing provides for an automatic price mover. An automatic cost-pricing formula could be used to adjust the price with limited emotion, publicity, and controversy.

Cost-pricing would reflect changes in cost conditions within the industry. During the 1970s when dairy costs were escalating much faster than prices the general parity index did not reflect these changes. Conversely in the late 1970s, costs stabilized as the support price continued to rise. Cost-pricing would circumvent such problems.

Cost-pricing would call for only minor alterations in a system of price supports that many believe has worked quite well. Other programs, such as production controls or target prices, would involve major surgery that would completely revamp the philosophy of dairy policy.

The mechanism would result in lower program costs, assuming price was not set too high initially. It may not prevent overproduction or high government costs as effectively as mandatory supply control, yet cost-pricing retains a greater free market orientation and would certainly be much cheaper for taxpayers than the program established by the Dairy Production Stabilization Act, or a program of target prices and deficiency payments.

Gains in productivity have enabled dairymen to offset many input cost increases. With predictions of a technological explosion in the dairy sector, there is even greater need for efficiency in the price support mechanism. Cost-pricing would account for such efficiency changes. The COP method captures efficiency gains made during the production period. With a dairy parity formula, accounting for changes in productivity would be imprecise. To correct this, it has been proposed that all or a portion of the dairy parity index be divided by an index of milk production per cow to obtain a "revised dairy parity." Even so, the dairy parity formula would have to be reviewed and modified periodically to account for technological advances.

Cost-pricing could lead to conflicts between large and small producers, between producers in different regions, and between producers who own their operations outright and those who rent or are highly leveraged. For example, larger producers tend to have lower average costs. Since less than 10 percent of the farms produce more than one-half the milk in the U.S., a large number of producers might be unhappy with cost-pricing.

While costs are important, they represent only one dimension of the appropriate level of milk prices. Another equally important aspect is demand. Cost-pricing *ignores the demand side of the price equation. This weakness could be overcome by moving to economic formula pricing incorporating both cost and demand factors, by tying cost-pricing into a supply-demand adjuster (to be discussed next week), or by giving the secretary a measure of discretion.

Finally, cost-pricing *may reduce price stability, which conflicts with a goal of the price support program. Grain prices are expected to continue to fluctuate widely, and since feed accounts for almost half of cash milk production costs, support prices would rise and fall in conjunction with grain prices.

NFU's Carpenter

in a position to profit," thus eliminating any hope of making farming profitable.

He said that lowering commodity prices to competitive world market levels becomes exploitation when other segments of business and industry aren't willing to compete at the same level.

Calling for prices that will once again make farming profitable, Carpenter said, "We only add to the problem by lowering (commodity) prices. Underdeveloped countries will have to produce more to meet the cash flow requirements of our own banks."

And Carpenter cautioned farmers not to pin their hopes on increasing export demand as compensation for lower profit margins. "There is strong evidence, for example," he said, "that within 10 years Russia may be a grain exporter."

But more compelling than Farm Bill reform is the need for an emergency credit policy to keep farmers on their feet through the current planting season. Carpenter blasted the President's recent emergency credit veto, saying that the administration's own proposal would rescue only about two to three percent of the farmers in need.

"For the President to say that only four percent of our farmers are in trouble is wrong," Carpenter said. "Here in Pennsylvania we'll lose one out of every five farmers within a year, and 40 percent of the farmers face a serious situation where it's questionable that they'll be able to maintain a positive cash flow."

In a policy statement adopted by delegates at their national conventionin Phoenix last month, NFU called for the following points to be incorporated into Farm Bill '85:

- A "long-term" farm policy should be enacted, rather than a four-year program.
- "Wide discretionary authorities provided to the Secretary of Agriculture should be drastically limited."
- Price supports should be enacted at cost-of-production levels.
- Reserve programs must be in force to insure adequate product for export and domestic committments.
- The Commodity Credit Corporation's role should be expanded to include negotiation of long-term agreements with importing nations.
- Deficiency payments should be scaled to direct the most financial aid to family farmers (NFU defines "family farm" as one that is owned and operated by a farm family, with that family providing most of the labor and management decisions.)
- Crop reduction and supply management programs must take into account soil conservation needs.
- The goal of Farm Bill '85 should be to move toward mandatory supply management programs adopted through producer referendums.

"If there is not a more positive course of action by Congress and the public, we won't have a family farm system by the end of this administration," predicted Carpenter.

The week-long schedule of public meetings was aimed at the non-farm sector as well. "The public must understand that they're in this with us," said Carpenter, adding that the loss of jobs by at least 60,000 steel workers can be traced directly to the dormant farm equipment industry.

Through its offices in Washington D.C., Colorado and Minnesota, the National Farmers Union serves 180,000 farm families in 24 states.

Ag trade still slow

WASHINGTON – U.S. Agricultural trade continues to face intense competition from other suppliers in the face of modest foreign demand.

Farm exports for fiscal year 1985 May total $34.5 billion – 9 percent less than last year's $38 billion, according to the agriculture department.

Export volume is now projected at 142.5 million tons – marginally less than last year's 143.6 million tons.

Agricultural imports are forecast at $19.5 billion and the trade surplus is projected at $15 billion.

Duncan elected

and scheduling dairy princess activities.

"Of course, I'm sorry to accept this responsibility under these conditions," said Duncan in reference to Hallowell's resignation, "but we do have an excellent staff and an excellent board, and I hope we can continue in the same manner as we have been."

The need to elect a new chairman came somewhat as a surprise to the board members as they convened on Thursday morning. Although Deputy Secretary of Agriculture Chet Heim opened the session, one of his first items of business was to announce the need for the election.

According to the federal law under which the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program Advisory Board was created, the board chairman must be a contributing dairy producer. Although former secretary Hallowell did meet that qualification, neither the acting agriculture secretary nor Deputy Secretary Heim are active dairy farmers.

After going into executive session to discuss the election, the board elected Duncan as chairman. They also chose Thad Woodward, of Canton, Bradford County, as vice-chairman and reappointed Cindy Weimer as board secretary.

The board took action on several dairy promotion programs during the Thursday meeting. Following up on their decision to again fund local dairy promotion groups, the board allocated $33,311 for 53 local project proposals.

The largest allocations went to the Berks County Dairy Farmers, the Crawford County Dairy Promotion and Advertising Committee, and Inter-State Milk Producers Co-op. Each received more than $2,000 for radio advertising, radio trivia contests, printing of placemats, purchase of a milkshake machine, and other promotion activities.

Exploring new promotional waters, the board members also voted to sponsor the "Dairy-ere in the Delaware," an annual inner tube float down the Delaware River. The river float proposal, which is a benefit for the Easton Chapter of the American Red Cross, sparked some discussion over whether sponsorship of the event would actually offer a chance to increase milk sales.

For their sponsorship monies the board will receive billboard, radio and print ads that link dairy products to the event and will have milk promoted during the "Dairy-ere on the Delaware."

After some discussion, the board members agreed, with a few dissenting votes, to accept the $20,000 sponsorship bid, with the condition that the Red Cross Chapter remove some of the cushion from the proposal and also change the suggested date for the float from June 30 to later in the summer.

June 30th is also the date of the "Make It Milk! Pirates Jersey Day" at Three Rivers Stadium. Coordinated by HBM/Creamer, sponsorship of the Pirates game will include milk carton side-panel coupons for game admission discounts, free 'Make It Milk" baseball jerseys to youngsters at the game, and a pre-game milking contest.

As details of the game were outlined by the HBM/Creamer representatives, the dairy board members did express dissatisfaction with the unavailability of milk at the game, due to lack of cooperation from the concessionaires. "It will be really embarrassing to take farmers down there for the game, and then not serve milk," remarked board member Beverly Minor.

HBM/Creamer will also be coordinating a statewide "Make It With Milk (And Other Dairy Products)" recipe contest over the summer. The board approved $48,900 for the dairy recipe contest.

In action on other promotional materials the board approved the purchase of additional beverage glasses with the dairy program logo, promotional placemats and "Make It Milk" banners and bumper stickers.

Barbara Hehnly travels long road to weaving expertise

BY SALLY BAIR
Staff Correspondent

SCHAEFFERSTOWN – Women who participated in the Lebanon County Ladies Day Out this week were treated to an intriguing display of looms and spinning devices at the home of Barbara Hehnly.

With three complete looms set up in her farm home, Barbara is ready to be weaving at a moment's notice. Three looms take up considerable space, but somehow they seem just right for the space in the Hehnly home at R.D. 2 Myerstown. Barbara and husband Earl have four children: Amy, 16; Bruce, 18; Betsy, 22; and Brian, 23.

Barbara explains that she has always had an interest in weaving, but didn't really indulge the interest until about five years go. At that time she bought a loom in Meyerstown, but didn't know how to use it until she took a course at the popular "Mannings" in East Berlin. It was there that she began what she calls a "long road." Her interest was whetted and she has continued to learn and expand her skills.

She says that information on weaving was "elusive" when she first started, but feels there is increased interest today, and a lot more information available.

Her interest in weaving may stem from learning needle crafts at the hands of her grandmother. "My grandmother had a lot of early linen. She lived with her sister, and when we were children they taught us to make hair pin lace and quilting," Barbara recalls. Through this early training she learned to enjoy working with her hands, and now can knit, crochet, do macrame, and almost any other kind of work. She says simply, "I do everything but tatting. I enjoy working with my hands. My hands go all the time."

She has, and uses, many of the fine linen pieces created by her grandmother, and recognizes the quality of the work. Indeed, she says she now wishes to specialize in making fine linen on her looms. She points out, "My main interest is in flax and linen. I hope to do table linens." Linen is a very durable product according to Barbara.

Now a member of the Board of Historic Schaefferstown, an authentic farm museum located just outside the small town, Barbara located seed for flax and helped plant and care for it at the museum farm. The Belgian fiber flax seed came from Washington state.

She said it was difficult to find information about cultivation of the plant, but they have now successfully grown the plant, and have learned to handle it to produce linen thread. This was, of course, a standard crop for the colonists who needed it to make garments. Barbara points out that the early records of Historic Schaefferstown notes that one of the Schaeffers grew plots of flax for the local people to use in their weaving, probably as a service to the community.

Flax requires a 100 day growing season, and Barbara says they try to plant it at the farm by April 15. Weather plays a big part in the quality of the fibers, and she said the best fiber is produced when there is a wet spring and the weather becomes drier toward the end of July and early August. Flax is harvested by pulling it out by the roots and hanging it to dry. It is "retted" by wetting it in the stream, and the fibers actually come from within the stem. The fibers are then spun into usable thread.

Barbara points out that the early linens used in American homes were often marked with the design by itinerant markers. "They worked the design in red," Barbara points out and has many examples from her grandmother to illustrate her point. Actually, she has spools of DMC thread used by her grandmother in linens, and Barbara has been able to match them yet today.

Barbara is a member of the Lebanon Spinners and Weavers Guild, the Barefoot Treadlers. "We learn from each other," she says of the group. It was through this group that her interest in spinning "evolved." She explains that most of the group members were originally spinners, so she learned to spin. In her family room there are two different kinds of spinning wheels, a castle wheel and a saxony wheel.

Her looms include two four-harness looms made by Leclerc, a Canadian firm. She also has a handmade Gallingher loom which is an eight-harness loom.

"Weaving is thinking," Barbara says. She explains that it is a little like playing a piano, in that the feet and the hands both operate the loom. "You have to learn the rhythm. Your feet know where to go. It has to be as natural to you as walking. "The only way to learn to weave is by doing." She notes that the feet actually make the pattern, and the heddles are pre-threaded in a pre-determined pattern. She adds that warping the loom is very time consuming, and also nerve wracking Barbara says she now finds her weaving relaxing. In fact, she says that once the rhythm is established, the movements become automatic. You can think about other things while you weave," she says.

Although she is very knowledgeable about spinning and weaving. Barbara is best known at Historic Schaefferstown as a baker. During their annual festivals, she makes dozens of cookies for festival visitors to enjoy. She makes primarily "lebkuchen," a Pennsylvania German kind of sugar cookie which is a crowd pleaser (Please look for the recipe on page B6.)

She says she has been baking at the museum for about 13 years, following a tradition started by her mother. The baking is done on a wood cook stove, which Barbara

Barbara Hehnly sits at one of the three looms set up in her home near Myerstown. Although only weaving for five years, Barbara has learned to enjoy the craft and hopes to spend more time perfecting it.

Spinning is a natural adjunct to weaving and Barbara now owns two usable spinning wheels. This castle wheel is of Danish design.

These are some samples of Barbara's handiwork on the loom. She enjoys making place mats and is experimenting with small purses made with wool.

Barbara Hehnly

insists is not difficult to use. Asked how she learned the proper technique, she says, "I lived in my grandmother's house and she always used a wood stove." Barbara said she also uses a wood stove in her own kitchen, but not exclusively.

When she is baking at the museum, she begins at making about 140-150 dozen cookies at home, to get a head start on the demand. She gets the wood stove going to about 350 degrees, and then starts the cookies on the bottom shelf. She said she turns the trays as they begin to rise, and once they are nearly finished and ready to crack, she moves them to the top of the oven.

She said visitors to the museum stand in line to get samples of these delicious goodies. She adds, "I enjoy Schaefferstown. I'm glad my children had the opportunity to grow up there."

Another love of Barbara's is plants, and she enjoys a greenhouse where she gets an early start in the garden with a wide variety of vegetables, flowers and herbs. She and her daughter Amy, 16, collaborate on a project of making straw hats, both for wearing and for decorating their home. Barbara starts and grows the flowers, and Amy dries them and decorates the hats. Barbara is also active in her church, St. Luke's Lutheran Church.

Eighteen years ago the Hehnlys purchased the house and 50-acre farm on which they now live from the Krall family who had owned it for many years. Barbara points out that the Kralls generated their own electricity, with the pump trough for the operation still in evidence. Although the Hehnlys own some early deeds, they do not know exactly when the house was built. What they do know is that the thick studded walls were filled with brick, an early form of insulation.

There was a summer house on the property as a separate building, but it was connected to the present house by the Kralls. Barbara speculates that there was probably a bake oven in that summer house. It now serves as an entrance and office to the Hehnly home.

The Hehnlys have added living space in the home by building an additional room, which houses one of the looms Barbara uses. This room was constructed from materials gotten from a house torn down during Project 70, the state project which created Middle Creek Wildlife preserve. The house dated from 1866, and the Hehnly's have the date stone from the destroyed home.

The additional room is connected to what was once a porch, and now is a convenient laundry room.

Barbara's home is filled with antiques, all of which are put to use. Many have been in the family for years, and there are some fine reproductions done by her husband, a masonry contractor.

In her small amount of spare time, Barbara enjoys gardening, both vegetables and flowers, and likes to can and freeze for her family. She and her family also make and sell opera fudge candy, a long-time family tradition.

She is hoping to expand her weaving and would like to do more marketing of her products. But she says realistically, "I want to work on perfecting what I do before I start marketing." Having given up her fulltime job at a craft shop, Barbara can spend more time weaving and spinning

Amy Hehnly enjoys creating fanciful hats both for wearing and for decorating. She and her mother grow the flowers which they then dry and use for ornamentation.

The rootworm insecticide built tough enough to last all season long.

Now there's BROOT™ from Union Carbide. It's the corn soil insecticide specially formulated to deliver the full-season rootworm control you need for higher corn yields.

Down deep, no other rootworm insecticide looks like BROOT™...

Unlike conventional soil insecticides, new BROOT is formulated into unique roll-compacted granules. Together with finely-ground gypsum, the active ingredient in BROOT, trimethacarb, is blended evenly throughout each and every granule.

Or works like BROOT™...

Because of this unique formulation, each granule of BROOT gradually releases its active ingredient throughout the rootworm season.

So your corn roots stand a better chance of developing normally.

Or handles like BROOT™...

This advanced formulation also makes BROOT soil insecticide easier to handle. It flows smoothly and evenly out of the hopper box. And BROOT is not abrasive to your application.

Here's proof.

Results from performance trials throughout the Corn Belt prove that BROOT soil insecticide provides the kind of protection you need for top corn yields.

In testing to date, BROOT has been a consistent performer in terms of root ratings and yield response. That's why BROOT is included in university recommendations for effective rootworm control.

So ask your dealer about new BROOT 15GX. He knows that it's more than just another rootworm insecticide. And once you try BROOT, you'll know it too.

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Spring is coming whether I'm ready or not. And, I have mixed emotions concerning the work that it brings.

It is so pleasant to have time to write letters to our children, to bake cakes and pies and work on braiding still another rug. But I realize that time goes on even if I'm not ready for all of the outside work involved in summer activities.

At present I'm thinking of menus that will be suitable for various dinners that I've planned. I have finally found the right time to invite a retired elementary school teacher to our home. She taught all of our children and was a favorite teacher of many parents too. She hasn't seen many of our children for years.

Then within a few days my Bible Study group meets at my home and also a committee to plan a reunion this summer. And, a young man from New York City expects to stop off here on his way to Washington D.C. and stay overnight. It will be a busy time and take some arranging.

I've trimmed the blueberries, the black raspberries and the grapes. This spring, for the first time in years, we've had forsythia blossoms on our two bushes. So, maybe we'll have blueberry blossoms too. Usually, the sparrows eat all of the buds off of both kinds of bushes. This year we sprayed them with Mesurol.

To top off a busy season, my brother-in-law had his house burn down and we are trying to help to clean up the debris. As he lives in another county, this is no easy task. It is good that he has kind neighbors and friends. Luck is not always with us.

Try pasta for a quick entree

Pasta is the perfect dish for those busy days when time is the kitchen is short. The term pasta encompasses all the Italian thin-dough products such as macaroni, spaghetti, and noodles.

While many of us know noodles and macaroni as tasty side dishes, we don't always associate them with inviting casseroles and filling main courses. But when combined with other foods in casseroles or topped with tasty sauces, pasta offers a quick and tempting entree.

CHICKEN CARUSO

4 cups chicken broth
7 or 8 ounces uncooked elbow macaroni
2 slices bacon, cut up
¼ cup finely chopped green pepper
⅓ cup finely chopped onion
2 cups cut-up cooked chicken or turkey
2 cups shredded process American cheese (about 8 ounces)
¼ cup chopped pimiento

1 10-ounce package frozen green peas, cooked and drained
3 tablespoons sherry

In saucepan, heat chicken broth to boiling; add macaroni. Cook 10 minutes or until tender; do not drain.

In large skillet, fry bacon until crisp; add green pepper and onion. Cook and stir until onion is tender; drain off excess fat. Stir in macaroni-broth mixture and remaining ingredients; heat through. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Featured Recipe

This week's featured recipe comes from Barbara Hehnley, a Lebanon County resident who enjoys making "leb cakes" at Historic Schaefferstown. Lubkuchen are an early Pennsylvania German sugar cookie and Barbara has been making them for about 13 years, using a wood-burning cook stove. She says people stand in line to sample the delicious cookies.

Although the recipe calls for hartshorn, Barbara explains that it is a preservative which is not available. It is, she explains, powdered ammonia, and is not necessary for the success of the cookie

Lebkuchen

3 pounds light brown sugar
¾ pound lard
1 quart buttermilk

THE MICRO WAY

LANI BLOOMER

Defrosting tips for your microwave

The man in the front row of my microwave class just stared at me. "You can't be serious," he said. "You mean I've got to make 300 hamburger donuts when I buy my next beef? ....no way!"

He was upset by my suggestion to package ground beef in a doughnut shape when freezing it.

When you defrost a solid lump of frozen hamburger in a microwave, you frequently end up with still frozen meat in the center surrounded by cooked spots along the edges. (I bet you know what I mean!) This isn't necessary, however. If the meat has a hole or thinner area in the center, it will defrost evenly throughout.

Most people buy a microwave for defrosting and reheating things quickly. Microwaves do these jobs beautifully. Here are some tips for even better results when defrosting foods.

– Defrost ALL foods except vegetables, before cooking. If you don't, you'll have hard dried out edges and a still frozen middle for dinner.

– Large dense foods like roasts, meat, or casseroles will need some standing time after microwave defrosting for the center of the food to finish thawing. Microwaves can't reach the center of these foods, so the middle thaws by heat conducted in from the edges. If you don't let them stand, the frozen center portion won't cook, and will be raw or cold when the edges are done.

– Turn most foods over halfway through defrosting. The bottom of foods tend to thaw more quickly than the top because of heat trapped between the food and the bottom of the oven.

– Cover foods to trap heat and steam around the food for faster defrosting. Casserole lids and plastic wrap will trap all the heat and steam; waxed paper and paper towels let steam escape but help hold heat in.

– Use small pieces of aluminum foil, if necessary, to SHIELD parts of food that are getting too warm. For instance, cover a turkey wing that starts to cook, or the thin end of a roast. Wrap a thin strip of foil around a solid lump of ground meat to prevent the edges from cooking (and try the doughnut shape next time you freeze meat–it really works!).

When using foil in your oven remember to keep it one inch or more away from the walls; do not let it touch other metal; and check for arcing (sparks) when you turn on the microwaves. If you see sparks, immediately stop the oven and reposition or remove the foil. If you see no sparks, small pieces of foil are safe and will not damage your oven.

– To defrost half of a package of vegetables or meat, wrap the part to stay frozen in foil, and leave rest of package unwrapped. Set in the center of the oven and thaw for half the recommended defrosting time, or until you can break the thawed portion loose from the frozen part.

– Frozen juice concentrates should not be fully defrosted in the microwave, because vitamin C is easily destroyed by heat. Heat a 6-ounce juice can (make sure it is a cardboard "can") for 30 seconds on high. This is just long enough to soften the edges so it slides out of the container easily.

You can leave the metal caps on each end of the cardboard containers of juice or frozen fruit, if the can is in the center of the oven. Check to make sure it doesn't arc (spark) when you turn on the microwaves. Do NOT put all metal or foil lined cardboard cans in the microwave.

– Remove any metal twist ties or clamps that might be on food packaging. However, those big metal clips around the legs in frozen turkeys can be left in during microwave defrosting. Just make sure they stay an inch or more away from the walls.

– Use a doughnut shape for packaging ground meat (except individual patties). Wrap any quantity of meat in a flat round shape. Press your thumb or fist (depending on quantity!) down into the center of the package to make the center much thinner than the edges.

– A thin flat layer of food will defrost more quickly than deep thick blocks.

– Put an empty paper or plastic cup in the center of a large casserole or container of spaghetti sauce, etc. before freezing. This doughnut shape will defrost quickly, then remove cup to cook or heat.

– If you have large quantities (over 2 quarts) of stew, etc. package in two smaller containers rather than one large one. Defrost both at once if desired, and they will thaw more quickly than when packaged in one container.

– If your microwave is a basic-zapper model, with no defrost power, use a heat/stand cycle for defrosting: Heat food on Cook (high, on, etc.) for one minute per pound of food. Turn food over in the oven, and repeat. Then let the food stand for 2 minutes per pound. Repeat as needed depending on food type and shape, etc.

– And last, but not least, read your manual thoroughly. Your oven's manual and cookbook have the best defrosting charts for you to use, because they were designed for YOUR oven. Mark the defrosting chart pages with paperclips to make them easy to find. If your oven has special defrost features or programs, learn to use them, they're designed to make defrosting easier and more accurate.

National Grange kicks-off sewing contests

DOVER, Del. – The National Grange needlework, stuffed toy, and quilt contests are open to all who follow the official rules, according to Mary R. Richard, Delaware State Grange women's activities director. "And they are open to both men and women and boys and girls (where there are youth classes)," she added.

The official rules have some size limits for items, and require use of the official sponsors' products. Proof of purchase must accompany the articles.

Fairfield Processing Co. sponsors the stuffed toy and quilt contests, and its Poly-fil products must be used. The stuffed toy contest has classes for three age groups starting with age 5. Toys become the property of the Grange and are given either to state institutions or nationally selected recipients. About half of Delaware's toys (and nationally) go to the Ronald McDonald Houses for families of children who must undergo long medical treatment. If National winners have had their 4-H leader or school home economics teacher sign their entry, the club or school receives an additional prize.

The quilt contest has two divisions: quilts entirely hand quilted, and quilts quilted in part or wholly by machine. The tops may be put together by machine even though hand quilted, and they can be patchwork, applique, or embroidered quilt tops. Each division has classes for individuals and groups.

Needlework contest participants must use Coats and Clarks products. Classes include crocheted or knit bedspreads, tablecloths, luncheon cloths, doilies, centerpieces or place mat sets; crocheted or knit yarn afghans or bedspreads, sweaters, suits, dresses, capes, stoles, and baby sets; embroidered tablecloths, luncheon cloths, pillow cases, wall hangings, pictures and pillows; needlepoint and counted cross stitch items; and rugs or wall hangings crocheted, hooked, woven, braided or done by other craft techniques.

Items must be turned in for state judging on Sept. 7, 1985, at Capital Grange Hall, Dover, by 9 a.m. Entry blanks and copies of the official rules may be obtained from local Grange women's activities chairmen, or write or call the State Grange Office, 911 S. governors Ave., Dover, DE 19901; phone 734-4653.

Residents of other states may enter through the Delaware State Grange if they do not have a local Grange to contact. In all contests professionals who teach these skills or make these items for sale are not eligible.

Helicopters will have more uses in future

WASHINGTON — The Wright brothers thought the helicopter never would amount to much. So did many other early aviation pioneers.

But in the past 45 years–since the first successful liftoff of a practical helicopter in the United States–aviation's ugly duckling has turned into a rare bird with seemingly endless possibilities.

Planned or on the drawing boards are helicopters that will fly more than 500 miles an hour, cruise at altitudes of up to 35,000 feet, and carry 64,000-pound loads.

"Helicopters will evolve a lot faster in the future than standard fixed-winged aircraft," John F. Ward, a rotorcraft expert with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, predicts.

Military Spurs Advances

"Military demand for new types of vehicles has speeded up design programs," he says. "This comes at a time when tremendous advances in electronic technology are taking place. Matching the two will soon provide some very exciting helicopters."

Test flights of one revolutionary new craft–a cross between a helicopter and an airplane–already have proven successful. Rotors mounted on each wingtip lift the vehicle off the ground like a helicopter. Once a certain speed has been reached, the rotors tilt forward and act like standard turboprops on an airplane.

A top speed of about 350 mph is predicted for this hybrid. The current speed record for a conventional helicopter was set by a Russian craft that flew 228 mph.

Even faster speeds are predicted for another helicopter now on the drawing boards. The craft's four stiff rotor blades, shaped like a large X, would stop turning at a determined speed. Auxiliary jet engines on the fuselage would take over, propelling the copter at speeds of more than 500 mph.

"These machines of the future will be streamlined," says Ward. "All the appendages that now hang on the outside of helicopters will disappear."

Guided by Computers

Big changes will take place inside the vehicles as well. Automatic guidance and control systems run by computers will enable a single pilot to operate a helicopter in all kinds of weather. "Flight planning will be as simple as dropping a disc into the home computer," Ward says.

Flights will be smoother and quieter. Engineers are working on new equipment and designs that would eliminate excessive vibration and noise, the two main drawbacks to present helicopter travel.

NASA and industry experts have pooled their research to reduce noise, and regularly exchange information on promising approaches to the problem.

Advances in helicopter technology will mean greater civilian acceptance of the vehicles. Ward thinks that by the 1990s helicopters carrying 45 to 50 passengers will take over many of the short-haul routes between major cities, and that by early in the next century jumbo helicopters carrying 100 to 150 passengers will be common.

But even now, the helicopter is earning its keep. Helicopters help put out forest fires, fight crime, and haul heavy equipment to remote construction sites.

At least one industry–offshore oil and gas production–would have a hard time staying in business without helicopters. The craft regularly ferry workers and equipment to remote rigs, and evacuate personnel when they're threatened by major storms or have accidents.

Saving lives has been a helicopter specialty since the first mercy mission in 1945, when one of them rushed precious blood plasma to more than 100 crewmen of a U.S. Navy destroyer who had been injured by an explosion.

Saved a Million Lives

Since then the craft have flown countless rescue and mercy missions. It's been estimated that they've saved a million lives.

Sergei I. Sikorsky, whose father, Igor, invented and flew that first practical helicopter 45 years ago, predicts that by the year 2000 almost all major hospitals will be equipped with landing pads and that helicopters will see increasing service as ambulances.

Large helicopters fitted out as emergency rooms and staffed with medical SWAT teams will respond quickly to natural disasters and other emergencies.

"Even in the days when the public was making fun of the helicopter and many reputable scientists felt it would never work," Sergei Sikorsky recalls, "my father said that one day it would be a unique vehicle for saving human lives. I never doubted his word for a moment."

LAUNDRY BASICS FOR 100 PERCENT COTTON CARE

100 percent cotton has regained its popularity as a favorite fabric in light-weight and feminine dresses, easy-going pants, soft and sporty terrys and sturdy jeans. Cotton absorbs moisture and feels cool--something the synthetic fibers cannot do. It is also durable, versatile, launders easily and does not pill or cling.

Adversely, cotton picks up spots and stains because of its absorbency. It has little resiliency or elasticity and wrinkles easily. However, you will find that many cotton garments have been given special treatments including wrinkle resistance, stretchability and soil and stain resistance.

The first step in laundering cottons is to read the care instructions on the label. Then sort items by separating white and colorfast garments from bright and dark shades. Also, separate the heavily soiled from the lightly soiled things and the sturdy cottons from loosely woven knits.

Treat spots and stains prior to laundering. The method will depend on the type of stain. However, many stains can be lifted by moistening the stain and rubbing it with a full strength liquid detergent on the wrong side of the fabric. Allow it to stand for about 15 minutes, rinse, and if stain has not disappeared, treat again. A regular wash setting can be used for sturdy fabrics. Select the delicate cycle for loosely woven knits. The water temperature used depends on the degree of soil and the color-fastness of the items being laundered. Use the amount of detergent recommended by the brand you prefer to use.

100 percent cotton can be safely bleached. Chlorine type bleach may be used on white items. An oxygen bleach is safe for colored cottons as well as all fabrics. A fabric softener will help improve the softness and comfort of cotton and also help to reduce wrinkling.

Tumble drying helps to maintain the softness od cotton. When drying, remove cottons while still moist and hang on hangers or lay flat to finish drying. This will help reduce wrinkling and also the possible shrinkage of cotton knits. Most cottons can be ironed on a high temperature setting. Those treated for wrinkle-resistance may only need touch-up ironing on a medium setting.

It will soon be time for the seasonal switch of clothing and accessories. Simplify the task and go through closets and drawers room by room. Use one box to collect garments to be discarded or given away and another to hold items that need cleaning and repair.

Soil weakens fabrics, so put everything away absolutely clean and dry.

Launder washables. Have non-washables dry cleaned. Hang garments. Place in garment bags or plastic bags. Fold items to be boxed; pack with tissue in between to reduce wrinkling. Sprinkle moth crystals or use moth balls when storing woolens.

Label boxes with contents for easy access. Keep sweaters, jackets handy for the first chill of fall. Store gloves, scarves and hats together.

Wash boots, shoes and handbags made of synthetic materials with a sudsy sponge. Rinse and dry. Use a special leather cleaner and polish on leather. Stuff boots, shoes and bags with paper to retain their shape. Store in boxes. Old socks make good protective shoebags.

With closets and drawers empty, it's a good time to freshen them. Wash, paint if necessary and devise new space dividers. Reline drawers with paper or vinyl. Now you're set to unpack and stock warm weather apparel and accessories.

Dairy princess candidates sought in Juniata County

All single young women who are between the ages of 16 and 22 and from a dairy farm background, are eligible to compete for the title of 1985 Juniata County Dairy Princess, announced Mrs. Jean Swartz, chairman of the Juniata County Dairy Princess Committee.

The winner of the dairy princess pageant, to be held Friday, June 21 at 8 P.M. at the McAlisterville Park, will be eligible to view for the title of Pennsylvania Dairy Princesses.

Twenty-seven state princesses and hundreds of county princesses have served as spokespersons for the dairy industry in Pennsylvania. They appear in shopping malls, fairs, supermarkets and on radio and television to educate consumers about the dairy farmer's product.

Any single woman who has completed her junior year in high school, is not over 22 years of age, never married and whose parents or guardians are engaged in farming, or if the young lady is the owner of at least one dairy animal, is eligible to compete for the title.

The winner must attend Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Seminar at Lycoming College, Williamsport, on July 15-17; and the Pennsylvania State Dairy Princess Pageant at the Marriott Inn, Harrisburg, Sept. 22-24.

The winner of the Pennsylvania Dairy Princess Pageant receives a $500 cash award. The first and second runner-up will receive a $300 and $200 cash award respectively. The state title is honorary and there would be no interruption of school or regular employment plans. The State Pageant is coordinated through the Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Services, Inc.

WE HELP FARMERS SURVIVE

They actually get bigger and better quality crops than their neighbors and it actually costs less to do it because our program loosens soil for moisture holding capacity, rather than making it tight and toxic. Then earthworms, soil bacteria and microbes really breed and multiply which releases tied up nutrients in the soil and gets plenty nutrients out of the air. Customers report double their neighbors crops in drought, and livestock produce better on the feed, more efficiency and less trouble.

And our customers save on that poisonous alfalfa spray which helps cause problems. They save money and trouble.

These features all really help the bottom line. One said it looks like our fertilizer is going to pull him through (financially). Ask for eye opening literature. Dealers wanted. Buy your own at dealer price.

On being a farm wife - And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

Too soon old, too late smart That old "Pennsylvania Dutch" saying assumes greater meaning to me every year On the other hand, a friend recently philosophized that he figures between the ages of 15 and 19 people know more than they ever will in their entire life

Which all puts me in a real dilemma. I'm well past the 15-19 age group. But I fear I'm not old enough yet to be smart. The reason this all is bothering me is a combination of seemingly unrelated news items that keep popping up. Personally, I think they ought to all fit together somehow, but I'm not smart enough to figure it out.

Chief of concern is the state of agriculture, especially the increasingly tragic tales of midwestern farmers losing their farms, and of whole towns, whole communities folding up.

In response to government pleas back in the early 1970's, they planted "fencerow to fencerow," to feed the world. Then, after the bins were full to bustin', that same Potomac political pack decided to punish the Russian Reds for venturing into Afghanistan. When the Russians pushed open the door to shop in the world grain market, it slammed back shut on the foot of the American producers

Along came several years of lousy growing weather in many parts of the country What did rain down was government deficit spending, related high interest rates, falling land values, and a strong U.S. dollar that cut export markets. It all formed a complicated economic equation that equaled the sum of tough times out on the farm.

Next item of news Washington lawmakers recently passed an $800 million African famine relief bill That's in addition to millions - or billions - in foreign aid already being passed steadily to assorted other countries.

(Please don't misunderstand: I'm not opposed to feeding the world's hungry. Much of that aid, however, is made possible by the production of the American farmer, who provides a steady, cheap food supply, enabling both financial and commodity aid to flow overseas.)

Next item The Defense Department claims that defense contractors have taken the taxpayers (you and me, folks) for millions (billions?) of dollars in overcharges, on everything from screwdrivers to toilet seats to coffee pots Padding those bills were charges for such diverse items as country club memberships, boarding corporate executive's dogs and company picnic funds And defense wants another six percent of budget increase monies.

And still another item Soil loss from erosion is becoming a chronic problem. The proposed 1985 Farm Bill would cut soil conservation funding.

All these news items keep spinning around in my muddled head Puzzle lover that I am, I just can't fit them into any kind of order.

Midwestern farms, we hear, will likely be bought up by corporate investors, then probably leased back to farming families to tenant. While there are exceptions, show me an investor-tenant structure which loves the land - and cares as much for conserving it - as does the farm family who's bought it with the sweat of their brows and scraped skin of their knuckles

Maybe farmers could organize as defense contractors, and deal with the Defense Department. Lack of funding there doesn't seem to be a problem Heck, if a toilet seat's worth $600, what kind of value should a bushel of wheat or corn have?

Or maybe farmers could secede from the Union and apply for foreign aid?

Like I said, the whole thing totally confuses - and frustrates - me Maybe I'm just not old enough to be smart enough to figure it out Or, maybe I'm too old

I sure hope someone comes along soon who is smart enough to figure it all out

Strong nations marked by close family ties

BY SUZANNE KEENE

UNIVERSITY PARK — Throughout history the evolution and demise of nations can be traced to the strength of the family. As new nations emerged, the family took a prominent position in the culture. But as the nations matured, a self-centered, "me" philosophy eclipsed the family's importance, and the nations fell.

"Strong nations are associated with strong families," said Dr. Nick Stinnett, chairman of the department of human development at the University of Nebraska. Stinnett was addressing participants at the First Eastern Symposium on Building Family Strengths held recently at Penn State University,

The same "me" philosophy and the search for self-fulfillment that has marked previous cultures can be found in the United States today. "However, in our search for self-fulfillment, we have often neglected the family," Stinnett said.

And it is within the family that we gain the self-esteem and communication skills we need for life. "So much of the happiness we know in life is influenced by the quality of the relationship we have with other people," he said.

Too often family educators have focused efforts on coping with family problems and have failed to take a look at the qualities that characterize a strong family. "All over the nation, all over the world, there are strong families," Stinnett said.

Through study and research of some 3,000 families, Stinnett has been able to formulate a profile of a strong family. "We have found six qualities that these strong families have in common," he said.

One of the most important things these strong families do, he said, is to spend lots of time together. Strong families work together, play together and eat together. And, they do a lot of things that everyone enjoys.

"So many families today spend too little time together," Stinnett said. Many family members make only brief contacts and don't really get to know one another. The atmosphere for developing a strong family identity doesn't just happen, families must make it happen, he continued.

Strong families are committed to each other as individuals and are interested in promoting each other's welfare, happiness and growth. This deep commitment is a priceless gift, Stinnett said, that brings with it the knowledge that no matter what you do, someone is for you. The members in the strong families he studied "know that the other people in the family are 100 percent for them," he said.

Individuals in a strong family are also committed to the family as a unit. The family takes a top priority in their lives and they structure their lifestyle around the family. They don't lead slower, less hassled lives, but they make time for their families.

When a family finds that life has become so hectic they aren't spending enough time together, Stinnett recommends making a list of activities each family member is involved in. By reviewing the list and scratching off several of the least important, the family finds more time to spend together. "We act too often as though we have no choice, but we do," Stinnett said. Strong families take the initiative and structure their lifestyles around the family.

The third characteristic of a strong family that Stinnett found is good communication between members. "They spend a lot of time talking to each other," he said, adding that while some of the talk is on a profound level, much is just everyday conversation.

And while one member is talking, the others are really listening. When someone listens to you, they are communicating respect for you, Stinnett pointed out.

The strong families also tended to have a strong religious orientation. Religion was a practical, every day experience for these families and most of them belonged to a church. Stinnett said that the families interviewed said they felt God was a source of strength for them and had a purpose for their family.

Stinnett's research also indicated that strong families have the ability to deal with crisis and stress in a very positive manner. "They are a good support system for each other," he explained. "No matter how bad a situation," he continued, "they focus on the positive element."

Their positive attitude carries over into the final characteristic Stinnett found in strong families — appreciation for each other. Family members in a strong unit express a lot of appreciation to each other. "They built each other up psychologically," and, he continued, "They do this every day."

A way to practice expressing appreciation for other family members is to go around the table and have everyone say something good about a particular family member. Telling each other what we like about them is a good way to develop more positive and stronger relationships, he said.

"Too often we're looking for the dirt in each other," he said. "We need to look for the diamonds."

Communication necessary for successful relationships

BY SUZANNE KEENE

UNIVERSITY PARK — Communication skills are necessary for developing successful relationships with those we live and work with. The ability to express opinions and emotions is essential for building and maintaining careers, marriages, and families.

"We live in an atmosphere where our income depends on how we communicate," Marriage Counselor James Becherer said recently at the First Eastern Symposium on Building Family Strengths at Penn State University. Becherer pointed to President Reagan as a prime example of a person who successfully uses communication skills in his work.

As a marriage counselor Becherer helps people find and solve their problems. "The main thing is they don't know how to communicate," he observed.

Women often come to him alone, while their husbands stay at home, refusing to acknowledge that there is a problem or unwilling to talk about the problem, he explained. The simple fact that the women come alone exemplifies that a communication problem exists.

Husbands and wives aren't the only ones who have trouble communicating. A similar problem often develops between parents and children, with parents being too busy to listen or talk to their children, Becherer said. At times, parents are just too preoccupied to pick up the signals their children are sending them.

Sometimes those signals, while faint, are revealing a serious problem in a child's life. The increasing number of teenage suicides indicates that parents and friends often miss these desperate cries for help. It is very important to listen to and reassure troubled teens, Becherer stressed.

Having determined that lack of communication in the creates problems in human relationships, Becherer offered a few suggestions to improve and open the lines of expression.

Mealtimes offer an excellent opportunity for family communication, he suggested. The dinner table is "not just a place to get food down, but to get knowledge and friendship down," he said.

But too often the family just sits at the table and stares at the television, Becherer noted. He related a story of a family who didn't know their teenage daughter was pregnant until the day she had her baby, despite the fact that she sat at the dinner table with them daily.

Becherer suggested several ways to develop and improve communication skills. The first step is to make a conscious decision to be a good communicator. "We must be the actors," Becherer said. And by choosing to be the actor and not the reactor, we must learn to expect and accept a certain amount of rejection.

An effective communicator also learns not to classify people. It is essential to really listen to people and not to anticipate what they will say.

It is iportant, he stressed, to be sincere. He quoted American poet Ralph Waldo Emerson who said, "What you are speaks so loud I can't hear what you say."

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, we must make time for each other. "We must prioritize our life," he said. Becherer referred to a song by Harry Chapin that relates the story of a father too busy to find time for his son. When the son grows up, he is just like his father — too wrapped up in his own life to listen to others.

"What you are planting in these children will come back to you another day," he cautioned.

Becherer also stressed that unconditional love and plenty of encouragement are needed at home. "One of the best things we do is to encourage each other," he said.

Spring Safety

It's spring, and with it comes hope and renewed life. From what I've seen so far in my travels around the county, I certainly hope there is renewed life for the hundreds of bicyclers who might get hit in the next several months. Perhaps I am just noticing more bicycles this year, but the statistics show there really are a lot of them on the go. Consider these facts.

- More than 100 million bicycles are in use on American streets and highways.
- About 7 out of 10 youngsters, ages 5 to 16 ride a bicycle.
- The predominant victims of bicycle accidents are children between ages 5 and 14.
- Four times each hour of each day during a year a bicycle driver is injured.
- One bicycle driver is killed every 11 hours in a traffic crash.
- Two out of every three bicycle accidents occur to drivers who have failed to follow the rules of the road!

The arrival of spring is a long awaited occasion for all kids, and especially those who got new bicycles for Christmas The excitement builds as they look forward to jumping on the ol'bike and heading down the street toward freedom.

Perhaps that crazy and carefree attitude contributes to the number of accidents that occur. That seemed to be the case as I drove along Rt. 422 last week. Crossing a busy four lane highway was a summer clad bicyclist who had safely crossed two lanes but failed to check traffic coming in the opposite direction in the other two lanes. Fortunately, the driver ahead of me was alert to the situation and defensively screeched to a halt just short of the bicyclist.

side and I cautiously pulled into my parking space, with my heart rate slightly elevated.

These safety thoughts come to my mind as I make plans to enjoy the spring weather on my own bicycle. It certainly is a great way to exercise and soak up the warmer temperatures outside. I spent many days of my youth perches upon a bicycle and I loved it. However, out on the farm there was a lot of wide open space to ride without worry about traffic. Still the big thrill was to be allowed to "ride on the road." This was approved after a good track record as a driver had been established.

Being a good rider, however, is not enough, particularly when faced with the statistics that I reported earlier Whether in the country, suburb, or city it is important to teach kids the basics of being a bicycle driver as well as being a rider.

A bicycle driver is required to follow all Pennsylvania motor vehicle laws just as a car is. Being a rider on the other hand implies that the bicycle is a toy to be played with however the child wishes

One of the best ways I know of to teach young kids to learn about bicycle safety, while having fun with kids their own age, is through the 4-H Bicycle project. Activities that can be included are learning the rules of the road, bicycle maintenance, games to play with bicycles, and group activities like trail rides and bicycle parades.

If you or someone you know is interested in learning more about being a safe bicycle driver, contact your county extension office. As you give the bicycles a yearly inspection in preparation for the summer months ahead, review bicycle safety tips and laws of the road.

Fabric painting with stencils

Armour Products has introduced a new approach to Fabric Decorating using finely detailed Rub 'N Stencils transfers and safe, non toxic colorfast fabric paints. This easy-to-use method requires only five minutes to personalize any wardrobe or household item.

The materials you will need are: Rub 'N Stencils, World of Stencil fabric paints, burnishers, tape scissors, paper towels, water for cleaning up, and an iron or blow dryer. It is important to remember that the fabric you choose must be a close-woven cloth. You always should do a test area first. For the best results, pre-wash the cloth before painting.

First, place the fabric on a magazine covered with a paper towel. You will need a hard surface for rubbing the transfer. Cut out the stencil and remove the protective sheet. Place the blue surface into place with the tacky side touching the fabric. Make sure the design is in the perfect position, and taped securely into position. Be careful not to tape over any part of the design.

Hold the burnisher in one hand and rub down hard enough on the stencil to make it begin to change color. Continue rubbing until the entire stencil has turned from dark blue to ligh blue.

Next, remove the protective mylar sheeting and remove all the tape that was holding it into place.

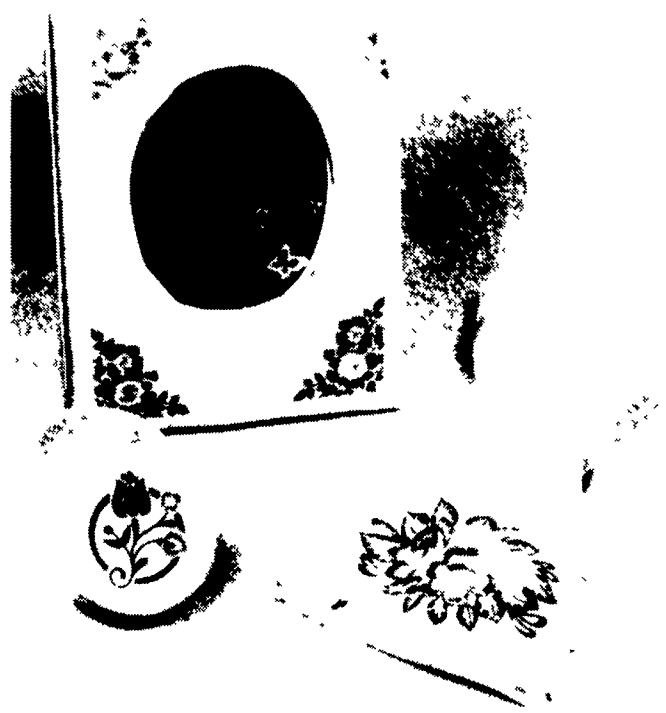
Take the protective backing sheet that was put aside in the first step. Rub the stencil with the white sheet, making extra-certain that every edge is well pressed down. Tape all around the edge of the stencil

Now you are ready for painting. Put a paper towel beneath the single layer of fabric to absorb any surplus paint. You may paint the design in as many colors as you wish, but it is suggested that you start with the lightest colors first and move on to the darker shades. It is important that you do not over-apply the paint.

The final step is to "set" the paints with heat. You can use either a blow dryer or an iron. To blow dry the paints set the dryer at a medium temperature and continue to pass the dryer over the paints until the colors become matted.

To set the color with an iron set the iron on the proper temperature for the fabric. Cover the fabric with a brown paper bag, and iron the bag making circular motions. Change to a white sheet of paper and continue pressing for about three minutes. Remove the stencil by burnishing wide cellophane tape to the stencil. After the entire stencil has been "taped," pull up the tape.

You can send for a free catalog of stencils and supplies by enclosing a large self-addressed, stamped envelope and requesting Catalog No. 84, from Armour Products, Godwin Ave., P.O. Box 56, Midland Park, NJ 07432.



Rub 'N Stencils make it easy to decorate and personalize almost any item in just minutes. They can be used on glass with etch cream and on fabric with fabric paint.

A craft can become a money-making business

BY SUZANNE KEENE

LEBANON — Are you one of those people who can take a pile of twigs, acorns, and evergreens and create an esthetic wreath? Do your fingers transform scraps of cloth into pot holders, dolls, and teddy bears?

If so, you probably started out making crafts for your own enjoyment. Later, you found yourself making items for family members and friends. You may even have placed a few items in a consignment shop or sold some at a church bazaar.

Your success in these areas may be tempting you to consider turning what started as a hobby into a profit-making business. But before you make that transition, you should stop and do some serious thinking and research, Penn State Extension Arts Specialist Mary Saylor advises.

Making the decision to view craftmaking as a business venture rather than a hobby involves a change in attitude and a conscious decision to make a profit, she said. If you are simply selling crafts to support your hobby, you aren't approaching it as a business.

Some people, she explained, have a difficult time selling crafts for money, because crafts are perceived as a leisure-time activity that people do for pleasure. "We have trouble charging for our time," she said, noting that if you feel this way you are a hobbiest, not a businessman.

But if you decide that you want to change your emphasis from hobby to business, you must work toward developing a professional attitude, Saylor advised. This means giving up a certain amount of freedom, working to satisfy not just yourself, but your customers as well.

Becoming a crafts professional means that you must develop an awareness of the legal aspects of the business. For example, she said, seamstresses should know that state and federal laws require craftsmen to have a license to sell stuffed toys and other stuffed articles. "You are required by law to be licensed," she explained.

A license can be obtained by applying to the secretary of Labor and Industry for a license or permit. The fee for all initial permits is $25.

The Bureau requires craftsmen to submit a sample of their work so it can test the stuffed article for flammability, colorfastness and other characteristics. "You don't want to send the best of anything you make," Sayler suggested, noting that in the process of the tests the article is usually destroyed.

The government also requires that sales tax be collected on all items sold directly to the public. Craftsmen should obtain a tax number, which will allow them to defer their sales tax on materials they purchase for their crafts, Saylor said.

A professional craftsman must also be aware of the copyright law, which protects the designer or creator from copies. A copyright gives the creator the exclusive right to control how, where and when the craft is used. This includes reproducing, selling, distributing or displaying the work or any part of the work. The creator retains copyright protection during his lifetime plus 50 years after death.

This means that all the Charles Schulz characters, Raggedy Ann and Andy, Cabbage Patch Kids and other similar characters are protected by copyright, Saylor noted Copyright protection also extends to patterns in books and magazines, unless otherwise indicated. "You can't xerox off someone's pattern," she warned

Some copyrights on patterns will allow the craftsman to make a limited number, but "you really have to read that copyright information," Saylor said. But although the pattern is protected, the item you make from the pattern usually isn't protected, she explained.

Saylor suggested two books by Leonard Duboff for craftsmen seeking additional guidance about art and the law. They are "The Law in Plain English for Craftspeople" and "Art Law in a Nutshell"

The term professional also implies advanced study in a specialized field. This means that the professional craftsman must possess a great deal of skill and experience, and must gain status and recognition from others in the field.

One way of demonstrating your skill and earning status is to produce quality crafts and to enter them in juried shows, Saylor suggested. Buyers see juried shows as places where the pacesetters gather to display the best of top quality crafts.

A business approach to crafts also means paying attention to pricing and market demand. While it's fine to take a creative approach to your crafts, it's not wise to be a creative pricer. "You must decide to make the greatest return on your investment," Saylor advised.

"You need to know precisely how much it costs you to make one item," Saylor said. This means the craftsman must take into account both fixed and variable costs.

Fixed costs include all the things that you have to pay for regardless of whether you produce anything. These costs include utilities, rent, and other monthly payments.

Variable costs are those which are production related. They include materials, labor, packaging, advertising and delivery charges.

"It's up to every individual craftsperson to determine the worth of his time," Saylor noted. In deciding how much your time is worth, consider your talents, prizes won, juried shows attended, and prestige among peers. "Look at the wages paid to other professionals," and compare yourself to them, she suggested.

All the time and all costs put into a project must be reflected in the item's price. The object here, Saylor reminded, is to make a profit. "There isn't anything such as free materials," she said, adding that those scraps of material taking up space in the closet cost money to replace.

When pricing custom items, it is important to remember that they take much more creative time to produce. Saylor suggested that a good formula for pricing custom work is to multiply the cost of time plus materials by 60 percent.

Market demand is another important factor to consider when pricing a craft. "You have to find out what the demand for your crafts is," Saylor said. To do this you must do what is called market research, which can be as simple as visiting local shops and department stores to price their crafts, or as complicated as developing and sending out a questionnaire and doing a statistical study of demand.

You should investigate the possibility of selling to bridal shops, computer stores, caterers, restaurants, motels, and other specialty stores, depending on the wares you have to offer. But when you decide to approach a business about purchasing your crafts, don't just show up at the door with your crafts. Make an appointment with the manager first, Saylor urged.

In marketing crafts, it is important to remember they are luxury items and you will need to show people why they need or want your articles. Crafts can appeal to a customer's need for beauty, prestige or the unusual, Saylor suggested. And, she reminded, "The more original they are, the more desirable they are."

Dr Saylor offered her craft advice at a seminar sponsored by the Lebanon County Extension this week, and will be returning in May to continue her lecture on craft marketing

MAKE SHORT WORK OF YOUR SPRING SPREADING CHORES WITH SPERRY NEW HOLLAND EQUIPMENT

When you have mountains of manure to move, you can rely on Sperry New Holland spreaders and skid-steer loaders. Their productivity, dependability and versatility make them a smart investment.

SUPER BOOM LOADERS

They're the skid-steer loaders with more forward dump reach than conventional loaders. You get reach that lets you fill the biggest spreaders from one side, plus a sure-footed stance with a longer wheelbase and a lower center of gravity than other loaders.

MORE THAN A MANURE HANDLER

No matter which "Super Boom" loader you choose, you'll find it does hundreds of jobs around the farm. It's so versatile, you'll use it every day for loading, lifting, digging, feeding, cleaning. There's no end to the chores it can do.

VERSATILE SPREADERS

All Sperry New Holland box spreaders are well known for fast, efficient spreading of solid manure. Now, with special slurry side extensions, they can handle sloppy, runny manure. The "fishbowl" shaped side extensions splash liquid back toward the center of the spreader. Our New Slurry Tank Spreader and our Flail Tanker also provide the same versatility. If you've got a lot of real soupy manure to handle these would probably suit you best. But these machines will also handle solids as well. Ask your Sperry New Holland Dealer for a demonstration today.

BONDED PROTECTION

Sperry New Holland offers you "Bonded Protection" on all box spreaders. That means you get free sides if those on your Sperry New Holland box spreader rust through while the rest of the spreader still works. Even if you buy the spreader used.

BEST VALUE PACKAGE

No one builds equipment better than Sperry New Holland. And no one backs up the sale as well either. Quality parts and service, excellent trade-in value, Bonded Protection, a one-year/500-hour warranty on loaders, and a two-year warranty on spreaders. NEWARK, Del. — If you tossed your garden tools in a heap last fall and left them to rot and rust, they won't be ready for action this spring. But there's still time to get them back in working order before the weather warms up and the gardening rush is on.

University of Delaware extension garden specialist Dave Tatnall has some pointers on how to tool up for the season by giving your equipment some special care.

First, check handles. You don't have to discard a good tool just because its handle is broken, he says. Handles can often be mended. To do this, drill two holes about an inch from each end of the break. Then fasten together the cracked or broken sections of wood with three-eighths inch flathead bolts. Remove the protruding ends of the bolts with a hacksaw and file them smooth.

If a handle can't be repaired, most garden centers carry replacements. These will cost much less than a new tool. Ash or oak are the best kind to use

The handles on hoes, shovels, rakes and other tools sometimes become rough and splintery from exposure, too. In this case, sand them well and rub thoroughly with a half-and-half mixture of linseed oil and turpentine. This treatment prevents drying, warping and moisture damage. Treat all unpainted wood on tools this way. Wipe away excess oil with a cloth.

If a handle has rotted off just above the blade assembly, it may be possible to whittle down the remaining section and reinsert it into the sleeve after removing the rotted wood and holding pin. Be sure to soak the shaved end in linseed oil and turpentine before replacing the tool head.

Carefully inspect all steel parts on tools for rust. Remove this with sandpaper or steel wool. Then coat the metal with oil or light grease, using an oil-soaked rag or discarded paint brush. Remove excess oil with a cloth. Tatnall suggests home gardeners invest in Teflon-coated cutting tools (saws, lopping shears and the like) because they are rust-resistant.

To work properly, hoes, shovels, spades, trowels and other equipment used for cutting, digging or cultivating need sharp edges. Sharpen them with a metal file held at a 45-degree angle to the blade. Sharpen hoe corners, too. (Remember, hoes are meant to cut off weeks at soil level, not to till the ground.)

A little time spent caring for tools now can make garden chores much easier.

With right conditions, Hydrangea can bloom year long

COLLEGE PARK, Md. – When the lights go up, so do the hydrangea.

Horticulturists at the University of Maryland have found a way to make the popular spring flower available almost any time of year.

Changing the amount of light the hydrangea is exposed to can fool the plant into thinking it is time to bloom, says Dr. James B. Shanks. This discovery makes it possible for growers to offer the flower on nearly a year-round basis, instead of just in the spring, he says.

This means that a flower that was once thought of only at Easter and Mother's Day could become a 12-month favorite. "The really innovative part of this work," Shank says, "is that we can eliminate the need for the plant's resting period."

This resting period, when an internal inhibitor apparently prevents the plant from growing and blooming under even the most perfect conditions, keeps greenhouses from flowering hydrangea year-round, according to Shanks.

But by varying the amount of light to the plant, Shanks says the resting period can be bypassed for more frequent flowering.

Large commercial greenhouses will profit most from this information, Shanks says. He says smaller operations will not have the market to warrant the outlay of much money to set up the special growing conditions. Already, several large growers in Florida and California have requested information about his research, according to Shanks.

"The big boys–those who start the plants and ship them to greenhouses like those we have in Maryland–are the ones that can make a go of it on a large enough scale to profit," Shanks says.

Selecting a tillage program

Kenneth Bechtel III of Bechtel Farms, Inc. reports that winter grains planted last fall using a no-till drill look much better than fall grains planted by conventional tillage. He also indicates that using a no-till drill for spring oats has enabled him to complete oats seeding in a very timely manner. Bechtel Farms was selected 1984 Outstanding Conservation Cooperator.

HARRISBURG – With the approach of an early Spring, the consideration of the best tillage system becomes one of primary concern. According to Joel Myers of the Soil Conservation Service, many factors enter into this selection Economics must remain a primary concern to everyone in all situations Of course the reduction of soil erosion should also be a primary concern.

Myers explained that a number of additional factors are more subtle, but can significantly affect adequate Plant Populations, especially in no-till planting. These include soil texture, drainage and temperature, problem weeds, nature of the prior crop and physical condition of the soils.

Reductions in labor could be a primary reason for utilizing no-till planting for many individuals. Of course with less labor, savings in fuel and equipment wear and tear will result. Myers added that improved timeliness of planting can often lead to better crop yields.

Overall, Myers indicated that the use of conservation tillage has increased in Dauphin County. However, the use of reduced tillage utilizing chisels and disks has become more popular. In terms of erosion reduction and crop yields, these tillage methods have been effective when adequate residues remain on the surface. However, they do require larger tractors and greater fuel consumption.

Myers indicates that crop rotations and good management can significantly improve weed control. The use of no-till drills can fit well into a crop rotation where small grains, hay or soybeans are utilized.

Although many farmers believe periodic tillage is needed, to plow down lime or incorporate organic matter, Myers says many people have no-tilled successfully for many years. Research also offers no real support for periodic tillage except for infrequent specific situations.

Myers emphasized the fact that he feels no-till drills can prove to be even more useful and beneficial to our farmers in the future. As economics permit the purchase of such equipment, the benefits of reduced soil erosion in crop rotations, labor savings, and timeliness will help many farmers to improve crop yields and reduce production costs.

Anyone wishing to obtain assistance in evaluating their own situation should call the Dauphin County Cooperative Extension Service, 652-7035 or the Harrisburg Field Office of the Soil Conservation Service, 652-7035.

Toilet training is easy when child is ready

Toilet training is a learning process for a child. Three basic skills are necessary for success: muscle control, communication, and desire.

• Muscle control. A child must be able to control his sphincter muscles to hold and let go of bowel and bladder movements. This physical ability does not usually develop until the second year and is often not fully achieved until the third year or later.

• Communication. A child must be mature enough to understand what it is you want him to do, and to communicate with you-by word or action-that he wants to use the toilet.

• Desire. A child must want to be trained, whether the reason is a desire to be clean, to be like his friends, or to please his parents.

In toilet training, the concept of "readiness" is central. Too-early training can cause frustration for the parent and unnecessary pressure for the toddler.

It is very important that parents be rational and realistic about toilet training. A parent who has an intense desire that the child be trained and who uses severe measures to bring this about is asking for trouble. Indeed, toilet training can become a major confrontation between parent and child because the parent wants the child to do something which the child often will not or cannot do.

A battle in the area of toilet training is a losing battle. Two factors are in direct opposition here. The child is entering a developmental stage where he wants and needs to be independent. At the same time, the parent insists that the child control the "when" and "where" of bowel and bladder movement to the parent's satisfaction.

One study showed that the average age for learning to use the toilet reliably is 28 months. Many professionals and most experienced parents recommend delaying efforts to start training until just before or after the second birthday, when training is much more likely to proceed gradually and with less conflict. Again generally speaking, parents can expect daytime control between the ages of two and three. Nighttime control occurs at approximately the same time or may be slightly delayed.

Observation and experience suggest that certain parental attitudes and actions encourage the success of toilet training when the child shows by words or actions that he is ready.

• Calmness and patience and a matter-of-fact attitude.

• Clarity in telling the child what is expected of him (i.e., to put his feces and urine in the toilet or potty chair.)

• Acceptance of gradual, rather than instantaneous, success. Praise and encouragement for successes.

• Understanding of failure Casual responses to failures indicate that you have confidence in him to do better next time.

Words or actions that show the child is ready

These words and actions show that a child is ready to begin toilet training:

• Pausing and making sounds or grimaces while having a bowel movement; telling you when he has had or is having a movement.

• Being regular in bowel movements.

• Staying dry for an hour or two in the daytime; waking up dry from naps.

• Complaining when wet or soiled; generally likes being clean and tidy.

• Being aware that urine and feces come from his body.

• Wanted to imitate adults or be grown up.

Preparing for training

As a way of preparing for toilet training, you can begin to comment when you know your child is having a bowel movement or when he tells you so. This will help him begin to associate the physical feelings and the result. Tell him that when he feels those feelings, he should tell you so you can help him get to the toilet. Then introduce him to the potty chair or booster seat.

At first your child may let you know he needs to go to the toilet after he has wet. This is not an act of defiance. It is a sign that he recognizes what is happening, a necessary step to being able to "go potty" by himself.

Wait until the child is ready and he will learn without battles. As one wise pediatrician said, "Don't worry. He won't want to go to kindergarten in diapers."

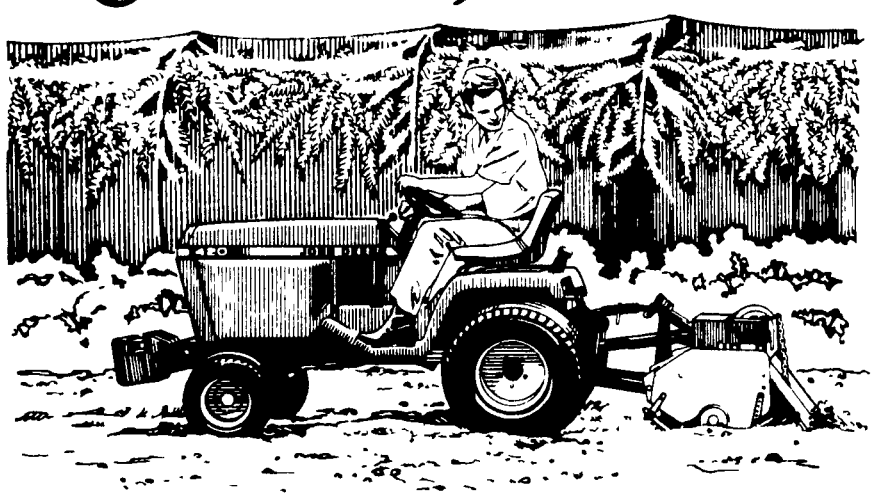
The groundwork for a productive garden begins with John Deere



Whether you're a backyard gardener, commercial grower or nursery operator, John Deere has a tiller right for you.

Tiller attachments are available for all John Deere lawn and garden tractors, 10 to 20 hp. The tiller for the 318 and 420 cuts a swath 48 inches wide and up to 8 inches deep The tiller for the 200 Series Tractors can be set for widths of 22 and 30 inches. A 30-inch hydraulic tiller is available for 316 and 318 Tractors. It has steel tines that can be set for normal rotation or for counterrotation when breaking sod or working in clay soils.

Walk-behind tillers come in three models. The 820A Rear-Tine Tiller has a commercial-type 8-hp engine and a 22-inch working width. Counterrotating tines can also be set for standard rotation. The gear-type transmission has 4 forward speeds plus reverse.

The 624 Tiller has a 6-hp engine and an adjustable 13- to 24-inch width The 216 Compact Tiller has a 2-hp engine and 16-inch tilling width Width of both models can be extended with optional tine kits.

Make gardening a lot easier this year. See us soon for a John Deere walk-behind or tractor-mounted tiller

THE FUERST F-L-E-X-I-B-L-E TINE HARROW/CART

Fuerst Hercules 30 Harrow carried on a Harrow Cart incorporating Treflan Amiben Lexone near Keota IA in one pass behind a 28 IH 496 disk

Improves Your Herbicide Performance!

- Eliminates a pass over your fields
- Requires little additional power
- Levels and prepares ideal seedbed

All for a minimum investment
Harrow/Cart moves quickly from field to field 16 to 30 foot widths

You don't need expensive implements to incorporate herbicides!
Work done by several chemical companies and universities demonstrates how effective the Fuerst Flexible Tine Harrow is behind cultivators or disks In essence farmers are getting two incorporations in one pass with the bonus of outstanding leveling and an excellent seedbed

One Pass Incorporation Strategy
The Fuerst Harrow carried on a Fuerst Harrow Cart retains its flexibility when in use assuring same depth incorporation throughout Behind your cultivator or disk you can expect to get good results of incorporating and leveling even on trashy fields Eleven rows of unique 3" inch long spreading action™ tines are linked together in a blanket like manner With no rigid frame the harrow is able to snake snugly over the contours of the ground The special tines are the key to the success of the Fuerst Hercules Harrow for incorporating and leveling achieving optimum results at 6 to 8 mph

- The Harrow Cart is rugged and follows tight turns behind a disk or cultivator wiping out wheel tracks as it goes
- The folding wings make transportation of the harrow from field to field a simple manner without restricting the harrows effectiveness in the field Can be transported directly behind disk or cultivator

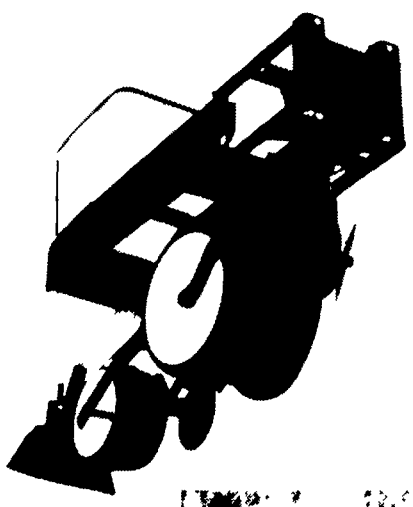
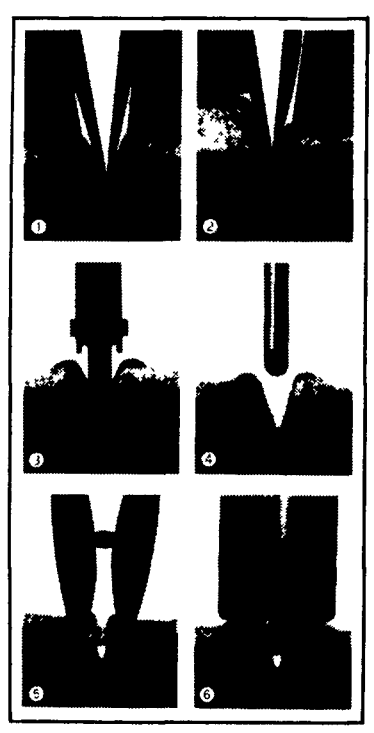
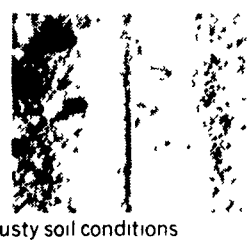
EARLY RISER ROW UNITS







Here's an actual photo of the Early Riser press wheel track Note the cracking slit it leaves in the soil so young plants can emerge easier in crusty soil conditions

Early Riser row units provide ideal seed environment preparation and seed placement for fast germination and uniform emergence.

The Early Riser row unit is the most advanced assembly of its kind because it prepares and controls a seedbed environment conducive to fast germination and uniform seedling emergence in virtually all field conditions and ground preparation practices Its consistent performance is unmatched for achieving maximum yield potential Basically here s how the 800 Series row unit works

1 Staggered double disk opener design places one disk slightly ahead of the other so it opens the narrowest seed trench possible In addition the thin edge of the leading disk and the adjustable pressure springs work to penetrate hard soil easier and slice through heavy trash more effectively than conventional opener designs equipped with no till colters This reduces power requirements cuts plugging in trashy conditions and eliminates the need for expensive colter attachments

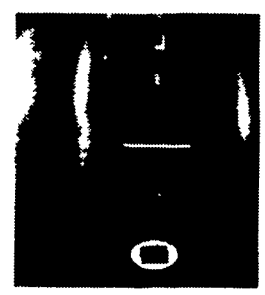
2 Exclusive front pull equalizing gauge wheels are connected through a special linkage that maintains equal pressure on the gauge wheels at all times As one wheel moves up over a clod the other wheel is forced down This equalizing action cuts opener movement to half the height of the obstacle and results in smoother row unit operation more uniform depth control and better seed placement especially in rough or untilled ground In addition both wheels are fitted with special profile moisture-saving tires that trap moist soil alongside the furrow This allows moist soil to return to the trench first, to surround the seed and help promote faster germination

3 IH patented furrow firming point firms the trench walls and removes loose soil from the bottom of the furrow leaving a well defined V shaped trench This eliminates seed bounce gives better seed to soil contact and improves capillary action of moisture to the seed for better faster germination

4 More uniform seed depth placement is another benefit of smooth narrow seed trenches Seeds delivered to the trench are grasped firmly and held in place eliminating seed bounce The clean furrow bottom also assures every seed is placed at the same depth a must for reliable uniform emergence

5 Twin inverted covering disks control the amount of soil cover Positioned directly behind the openers they replace moist soil captured by the special profile tires to the seed trench first assuring faster germination Covering disk depth is set automatically when row unit depth is selected for complete control over covering performance In addition the twin disk cutting action reduces plugging in trashy field conditions when compared to other closing methods

6 Wide, semi-pneumatic press wheels gently compact soil over the seed to eliminate moisture robbing air pockets A center rib on each press wheel provides a cracking slit allowing young plants to emerge easier in crusty soil conditions The press wheels also produce a slightly mounded seedbed profile that is ideal for effective chemical banding



Match planter row unit performance to field conditions without tools One knob conveniently located on the rear of each planter unit sets depth gauge wheels opener and covering disk depth and press wheel down pressure The row unit knob works on an index that s zeroed at the factory All you have to do is determine the proper setting for one unit then set all the other units at the same place on the scale Nothing could be faster or easier

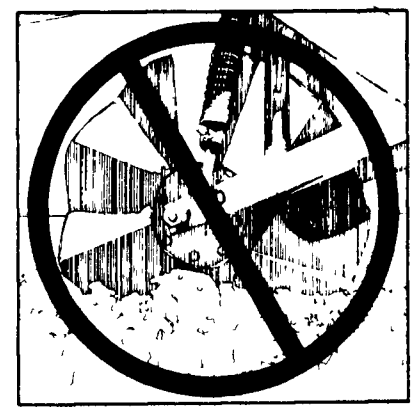
EARLY RISER GIVES YOU BUILT-IN NO-TILL PERFORMANCE AT NO EXTRA COST.

Are you looking for a planter that can go from conventional-till to min-till or no-till without the extra cost of no-till colters? Then International Harvester has the answer...the International® 800 Series Early Riser planter.

In side-by-side, on-farm tests, an independent testing agency confirmed that the exclusive design of the International narrow angle, staggered double disk openers penetrated hard ground and sliced through trash better than two other popular competitive planters equipped with colters. Tests also proved that the Early Riser outperformed the other two planters in both emergence and yield. Furthermore, farmers confirmed that the Early Riser was faster and easier to adjust and calibrate in all planting conditions.



So if you're considering a new planter, get the planter that's ready for no-till when you are...the International Early Riser. See us today for details.

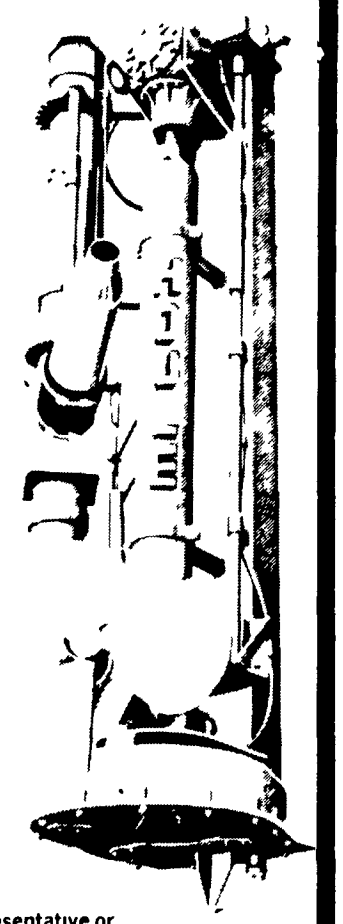
The MANURE PUMP with a BIG BITE



If you are trying to agitate and pump manure without this big propellor and positive cutting blade, you probably aren't doing it as fast as you could.

This big 24" steerable propellor agitates even the hardest of manure storage pits with heavy bedding at displacement rates of 18,000 gallons per minute. The cutting blade will chop long straw bedding and hay from feed bunks to mix it into a rich and creamy fertilizer. This pump is available for all sizes of storage areas in lagoon, trailer, 3-point hitch, and stationary models.

At Adams Co. Beef Ball,

BY JOHN STOKES SCHMIDT
Staff Correspondent

YORK SPRINGS – The Adams County Beef Producers Association held its 9th Annual Beef Ball and Parade of Bulls at the York Springs Fire Hall on Saturday, March 30. The evening of dinner, awards and dancing attracted 230 area producers.

Dr. Lowell Wilson of Penn State's Animal Science Department, commented on the state voluntary beef check-off program for advertising, adn Paul Hevner current "Pennsylvania Cattleman of the Year" discussed support for a Pennsylvania beef referendum which would require each producer to provide a small contribution for advertising dollars from each head sold.

Adams County Beef Producers member Frank Darcey presented the Association's annual award to George Hamilton, a Vo-Ag Instructor at Biglersville High School. Hamilton was cited for his outstanding accomplishments in youth work both in and out of school. Adams County Association Secretary, Faith Peterson, introduced the 1984 Beef Producers Queen Tina Hawn of Gettysburg and presented her with flowers.

But the highlight of the annual event was the Parade of Bulls. Four farms representing Pennsylvania and Virginia provided quality bulls for display. The entire crowd including the band and fire hall members watched eagerly as William Huffman led in the first bull of the evening, Riverwood Norton, a Charolais from Whispering Hills Farm of New Oxford. LVF Fullero followed, exhibited by Dr. and Mrs. Carl E. Brothers, Chianina breeders from East Berlin. Each bull was described to the audience as they were walked through the fire hall. All four bulls originated from distinguished bloodlines and many were champions at several fairs and shows.

Following the impressive, young Chianina bull, Moriah Hills Farm, Ray and Jean Reid Jr. owners, presented a yearling Santa Gertrudis bull. WF Creel 399 traveled all the way from Culpepper, Va. to be included in the Parade of Bulls.

Rounding out the parade came a Simmental Yearling names WSF General owned by Jay E. Stough of Spring Grove. The bulls stimulated much discussion and attention from all on-lookes.

Future events for the Adams County Beef Producers Association include an annual summer field day and picnic.

The chairman of the OSU swine staff, Dr. Isler was a contributing author to the "Pork Industry Handbook", and has authored articles for the "Journal of Animal Science".

Other speakers will include Dean Slichter of the Dean Witter Investment firm, Penn State Extension computer agent Kirk Barbieri, and Penn State Extension veterinarian Dr. Larry Hutchinson.

We were wrong

Concerning an article appearing in Section D of our March 23, edition, an incorrect date was reported in our story about the Northwestern Pa. Cattlemen's Association.

Deadline for entry in the Keystone Classic Junior Beef Show is, in fact, May 1, not April 1, as reported.

Pasture Renovation

Maybe the snow earlier this week was the grand finale and we can now turn all of our attention to spring chores around the farm. I know that field work gets the most attention and perhaps rightly so, but let's not forget about livestock that will soon be turned out to pasture. Better yet, let's put more attention on the pasture itself!

Pastures are generally relegated to the farm's poorest land, most often to acreage that is not tillable. However, pastures are economically important to the farm and to Pennsylvania agriculture, especially when one considers the income derived from forage-consuming livestock.

Pasture improvement practices and good management of pasture land can greatly increase forage production while decreasing the cost of production for livestock. The more high quality, succulent forage provided in pastures for grazing livestock, the less forage the farmer must harvest, haul, store and feed out to livestock.

There are especially three steps to renovating a pasture. The first is to improve the soil fertility, in order to meet the plants nutritional needs. Secondly, controlling undesirable vegatation or weed control is very important. The third step is to introduce more desirable plant species by seeding the taller more succulent and productive grasses and legumes.

Now, more than ever before, the farmer has at his disposal the tools and technology needed to renovate pastures. Excellent herbicides are on the market to control weeds that have invaded pastures, and new no-till and minimum-till seeders have great advantages over conventional tillage on hilly pasture terrain.

There are simple practices that anyone can perform at this time of year that are also important in pasture renovation and maintenance. It is an excellent time to walk the fence lines and tighten, repair, adjust, and strengthen where needed. A tractor, wagon, friends and family can make picking rocks, trash, brush, and debris a fun family outing.

Spring is also a good time to drag pastures to spread out droppings and loosen up the soil. Remember to apply lime at least every 4-5 years. Take a soil test, it's the only way to be sure.

April is Lamb Month

WASHINGTON, D.C. – April was officially designated as National Lamb Month by Secretary of Agriculture John R. Block at a proclamation signing ceremony held at the U.S. Department of Agriculture on Wednesday, March 27th, in Washington, D.C.

The Washington ceremony and reception was the kickoff of numerous state and local events honoring lamb and wool and other products of the American sheep industry which are produced by over 123,000 sheep producers nationwide.

At the signing, Block read a statement from the proclamation which highlights the contributions of the sheep industry: "Sheep were first brought to our shores in 1519 by Spanish explorers. Today, an industry has evolved from the first small flock....a vital industry of importance throughout our history...an industry that today provides numerous jobs, contributes substantially to the economy and clothes and feeds consumers at home and abroad.

Steve Gillmor, chairman of the National Wool Growers Association, accepted the signed proclamation from Block and said, "This is a proclamation for the oldest commodity group in the nation and the last to celebrate a proclamation for a day, week or a month and we thank you for this great honor to our industry."

Listed below are some sheep industry facts:

- Valued at $638 million, the 1984 flock produced over 372 million pounds of lamb (up about 7 percent) from 1982) and about 95 million pounds of wool during 1984.
- There are about 123,300 sheep producers in the United States. Sheep are produced in every state, although 17 western states account for 80 percent of total domestic production. The top five sheep states are Texas, California, Wyoming, South Dakota and New Mexico, respectively.
- Some sheep breeds are raised primarily for lamb and others for wool. Certain areas of the country are known for their wool and others for lamb. Most of Texas and New Mexico is fiber country, while the rest of the country is meat oriented. Southwest fleeces produce the finer wools and the longest in staple length. Coarser, shorter fibers come from the northern and mid-western fleeces.
- On the average, lamb provides 75 percent of producers' income; wool and pelt credits represent the remaining 25 percent. Forty years ago, the opposite was true.
- The cost-price squeeze affects sheep producers just as it does all of agriculture. The American sheep producer is adapting through intensive and efficient management, selective breeding for more twinning, improved feeding programs for better meat yields, and more effective marketing procedures.
- One of the most versatile animals, sheep adapt to a wide variety of climates and feeds. They are found grazing anywhere from the desert to the high mountains.
- Western range herds usually number 2,000 to 5,000 head, but some are as large as 20,000. Farm flocks are normally smaller (500 head or less). New techniques in intensive management make it possible for medium-sized farms to support flocks of up to 1,000 head

Two-step program prevents pinkeye in cattle

ST. JOSEPH, Md. — Anyway you look at it, pinkeye is a troublesome, expensive disease in beef cattle. But adding two steps to a herd health program can prevent most cases, says a veterinarian consultant.

The first step is vaccination for Moraxella bovis, the bacteria considered to be the primary cause of pinkeye, says Dr. John Herrick, Paradise Valley, Ariz. Second step is a sound fly control program.

More than one factor causes pinkeye, Herrick says, and they're all common to cow herds in summer.

M. bovis is always around cattle. Other organisms are suspected to act as "triggers" to predispose eyes to infection. Ultraviolet light sensitizes eyes. Flies, dust and wind add further irritation and carry disease-causing organisms.

With susceptible cattle and the wrong kind of luck, "You can trigger off pinkeye pretty easily," Herrick says. Calves are the most susceptible, though breeding-age cattle also may be affected.

"If bulls pick it up, they can't find their way to their business, and that creates an economic problem," Herrick says. "Your breeding season goes to pot."

The biggest economic loss from pinkeye, however, is its effect on calf weight. "You may have a 10 to 20 percent shrink," Herrick says. "With a six-week siege of pinkeye, you've lost dollars in the shrink and the time factor of getting that weight back."

While cattlemen can't control all the causes of pinkeye, they can address the two biggest factors: M. bovis and flies, Herrick says.

Vaccination

A big improvement in pinkeye prevention has been the introduction of federally licensed M. bovis vaccines, Herrick says. These vaccines build up resistance to the organism and greatly reduce chances for infection.

In a Utah field study of six herds, 17.7 percent of the nonvaccinated animals developed pinkeye. Symptoms ranged from mild to severe. Of the cattle vaccinated with a piliated M. bovis vaccine, 2.6 percent developed pinkeye. But all symptoms were mild, and the cattle recovered more quickly than nonvaccinates, with or without treatment.

To maximize cattle resistance to M. bovis, Herrick recommends two doses of the vaccine, 21 days apart, a month before fly season starts. For breeding cattle, a single annual booster will maintain immunity.

M. bovis vaccines have been available only through veterinarians the last two years, Herrick says. This year, producers can buy a pinkeye preventive as part of a "combination" vaccine. Two new combination vaccines integrated a piliated M. bovis with other bacterins are available from Anchor Animal Health. USDA approved the first two pinkeye combinations in late March, 1985.

Fly Control

For fly control, Herrick recommends use of both insecticide dust bags and ear tags "Ear tags can't do it all themselves. You should use other control measures, too," he says.

Dust bags are most effective when hung near water, shade or in a gateway cattle use daily. Despite concerns about fly resistance in some areas, Herrick says, the tags generally are still very effective.

But he issues two cautions:

"Follow the manufacturer's recommendation of one tag or two per animal, and tag cows right at the start of fly season. Don't let flies get ahead."

Pinkeye preventives should be only part of a herd health program, Herrick says. Without it, you're "shooting in the dark at a lot of things."

"Other agents, such as IBR, will give you some of the same clinical signs as pinkeye," he says.

In general, Herrick recommends that cows be vaccinated between pregnancies for IBR, BVD, PI3, pinkeye and the reproductive diseases.

"Where we've set up those programs, we've nearly eliminated abortions completely," he says.

In spring calving herds, it's also a good idea, Herrick says, to vaccinate calves for IBR, pinkeye and the clostridial diseases, castrate and implant them when they're one to three months of age.

"A cattleman following a good program like that will end up with calves 40 to 50 pounds heavier at weaning," Herrick says.

ABS offers tips on sire selection

BY ROBIN PHILLIPS
Staff Correspondent

FLEETWOOD – In breeding dairy cattle, dairymen must shoot ahead, not breed for today, according to Morris Ewing, senior sire analyst with American Breeders Service, DeForest, Wis. Ewing spoke to dairymen at an ABS-hosted luncheon recently at the Fleetwood Grange Hall, Fleetwood. Encouraging dairymen to use the young sires in their breeds to hasten genetic progress, Ewing introduced the top ABS lineup and his selection philosophies in obtaining the outstanding sires for tomorrow.

"I think there are all kinds of opportunites today for breeding good cattle," Ewing stated. American Breeders Service continually tries to bring in better bulls in their lineup, and currently features five of the top ten Holstein bulls in their battery. "If we're bringing in better bulls all the time, it's going to improve the lineup," Ewing observed.

Ewing stated that ABS selects 20 to 25 percent of their bulls out of the mature bulls from breeder proving groups. Other young sires are proven through the ABS sire program. "We can do better by working out of both populations," Ewing continued.

Although admitting that there are no guarantees in genetic evaluations, Ewing said that the tools and accuracies are much better today then they were years ago when artificial insemination had its beginnings. "Lean toward data sets with the most daughters," Ewing advised.

"A good group of young sires is probably as good as the tail end of proven sires," Ewing stated. But he added, "Breed the best to the best. The potential for inheritance is there."

He also advised dairymen to use the genetics in their heifers. "The heifers ought to be the best genetics in the herd. Don't waste this opportunity," the sire analyst warned.

Don't waste this opportunity," the sire analyst warned.

With a slide presentation on the current line-up of ABS in the Holstein breed, Ewing commented on each of the current sires available to dairymen. "If we have a bull capable of hitting +2000, he would be my nominee," Ewing referred to "Arlinda Carl." In regards to "Cass," Ewing observed, "He's the fanciest bull I've worked with in quite a long time." "Gold," the current leader on the Holstein list, is Valiant's highest PD dollar son and becoming well known for the type of daughters he sires.

Ewing also stated he is very optimistic about the 12 additional bulls held over for the July summary proof.

"I feel good about our Jerseys at this time," Ewing continued. He added that the breed has really turned the corner and made much needed progress on production and test.

Regarding the other colored breeds, Ewing encouraged breeders to get more young bulls sampled. "You must keep trying if you're going to keep up with the top bulls," he stated.

Commenting on the new linear system of appraisal and data, Ewing appreciates the greater accuracies these meaurements bring into the system. But, he observed, "I wonder if we're ready to breed the type of cow that the data suggests will milk the best, breed the best....."

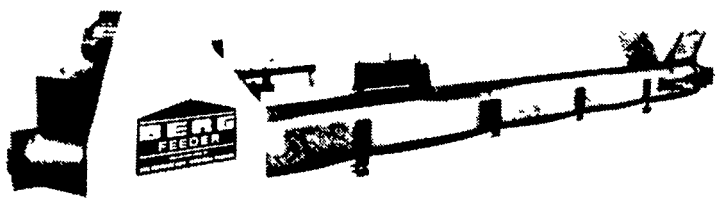
"We can have good cattle today that are good type cattle and good yield cattle," he added. "We just might have to change a few ideas on how they ought to look."

According to this sire analyst, calving ease sires are not as important. The management raising the best and healthiest heifers is the important thing.

He also commented on the management at ABS. "An organization is only as good as the people running it," he stated Regarding the semen quality at ABS, semen must meet strict qualifications. If it does not meet these criteria, it is discarded.

"There is no place to tolerate genetic abnormalities," Ewing also added. If an abnormality shows up, the animal is destroyed

The dairymen's meeting was sponsored by American Breeders Service and Andrew Cooper, ABS technician in Berks County.



Berg's "Feed Express" transports feed up to 120 feet.

Berg Equipment debuts new belt conveyor, feeder

MARSHFIELD, Wis. – Large volumes of rations can be moved quickly, economically and without particle separation from storage structures to feeding areas up to 120-feet away with the new, "Feed Express" Belt Conveyor/Feeder being introduced by Berg Equipment Company, Marshfield, WI 54449.

The new, Berg "Feed Express" Belt Conveyor moves materials at 350 feet-per minute on its durable, 15-in. wide PVC polyester cord belt. It elevates feed up to 15-degrees with a standard belt and up to 30-degrees with a special, chevron belt.

The Berg V-belt and roller-chain drive unit requires only a 1 H.P. electric motor for conveyor lengths up to 40 feet, and a 2 h.p. from 41 to 120 feet. Drive unit is top-mounted, but can be bottom-mounted if space is limited.

Large, 8-inch diameter head pulley on the Berg "Feed Express" Belt Conveyor/Feeder has a spiral top-lagging for best belt-driven traction and is crowned at the center for continuous belt alignment. Automatic spring tension keeps the belt tight, while return rollers cut belt drag and wear. The 5-inch, wing-type tail pulley is self-cleaning.

Plow blades are automatically switched for feed delivery from one side to the other by a simple, mechanical control that is easy to set-up, adjust and maintain. These blades also may be opened up allowing feed to pass through them for an end-of-the-belt discharge.

To assure equal distribution to both sides of the feeder, each blade travels one full cycle, down and back over the entire length of the belt, before switching to the other blade. Berg's unique plow mechanism is operated by a continuous-loop cable drive that is located, out-of-the-way, within the belt loop.

Berg offers a complete line of optional equipment for any "Feed Express" Belt Conveyor/Feeder installation, including belt feeders, covers, scrapers, incline/decline sections, drop-offs, down spouts and diverters.

Donahue trailer has fold-up beavertail

DURHAM, Kan. – The Donahue Corporation has expanded its line of flatbed "gooseneck" trailers with the addition of a unique beavertail model featuring fold-up ramps and level deck between ramps.

With ramps folded down, the new "Tail Away" model provides conventional beavertail loading ease. For travel, the unique ramps and deck between ramps lift level to trailer bed, providing an additional five feet of usable flatbed deck, and structural strength equal to the normal trailer bed. This is a big advantage when loading from a dock or when the full bed length is required.

The "Tail Away" models are part of a complete line of new Donahue beavertail trailers available in bed lengths ranging from 18- to 30-feet with gross vehicle weights from 18,000- to 40,000-lb. Units are available with "gooseneck" or straight hitches.

For information regarding this new adjustable "Tail Away" trailer, contact The Donahue Corporation, P.O. Box 126, Durham, Kansas 67438, 316-732-2665

Safety kits available for Fimco "Big Butch" washers

HARRISBURG – The State Agriculture Department today reminded farmers the Fimco, Inc. of Sioux City, Iowa, is voluntarily providing safety kits for the company's electric pressure washers purchased before January 1984.

The company is working in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission to help modify the handles of approximately 14,150 washers sold throughout the nation.

The affected washers pump water under high pressure to clean porches, houses, motor vehicles, outdoor power and farm equipment. The washers were sold nationally under the "Big Butch" trade name by retailers and under the Sears brand name through Sears catalogs.

Pennsylvania farmers and businesses which have these products should call Fimco toll-free at 1-800-831-0027 to obtain the free safety kit and complete instructions. The safety kit consists of four insulated bolts to replace bolts on the handle. Consumers may also call the Consumer Product Safety Commission toll-free hotline for information or assistance at 1-800-638-CPSC.

According to Fimco, the washer presents no hazard if operated according to instructions However, the metal handle or exposed metal parts could become electrically charged if the machine is not properly grounded and a fault occurs. Under these circumstances, a severe or fatal electric shock could result when the user touches the metal handle or other exposed metal part.

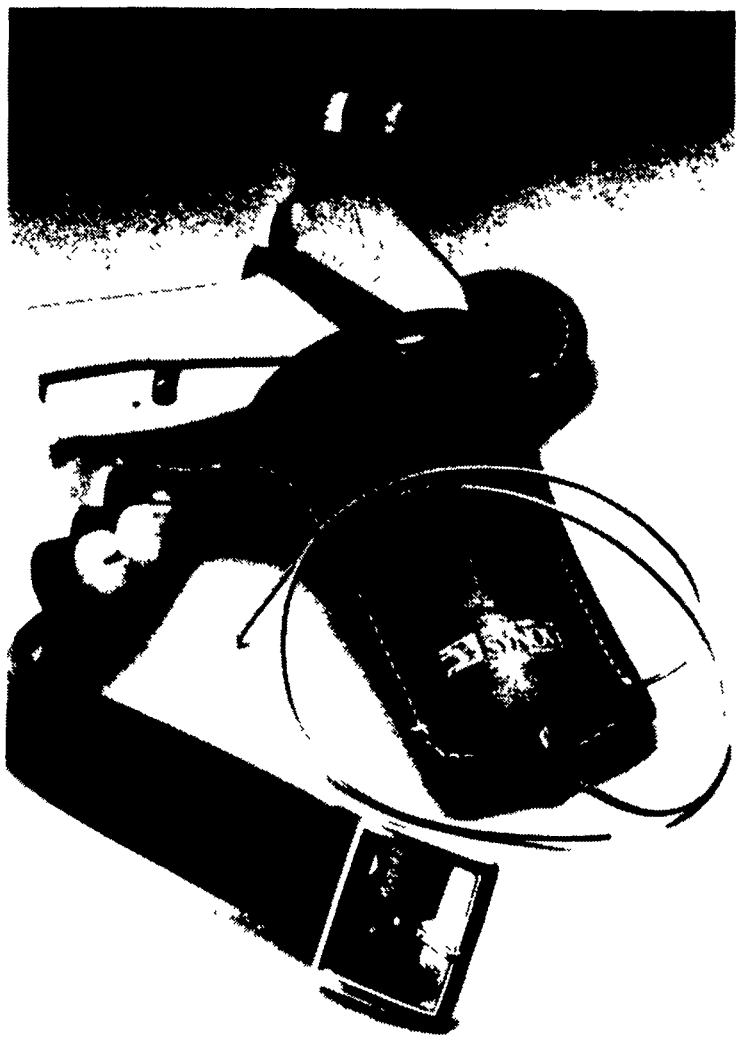
Holster available for Synovex implant revolver

DES MOINES, Iowa – Now users of the Synovex S, H and C implants can protect the new Synovex Revolver from dirt or damage with a new companion holster made of durable leather. The holster can be strapped to the hip providing a convenient, clean place to keep the Revolver whenever it is not in use.

The holster can be purchased with or without its own belt. The optional belt contains places to keep unused 10-dose Synovex implant cartridges. A tie down strap keeps the holster attached to your leg.



Implanting becomes more sanitary and convenient with the Synovex revolver holster and belt.

Proper implanting of Synovex is an important detail that can have a tremendous impact on the economic performance of cattle, according to Robert Botts, Ph.D., nutritionist with Syntex Animal Health. He explains, "Each time you implant, regardless of the brand of implant, you're probably carrying in foreign materials or agents that can cause a reaction. That's why it's important to have an implant needle that's clean. The needle itself doesn't cause an infection, but what it carries in does."

Some important implanting tips offered by Dr. Botts are:

–Proper training of personnel in implant administration is recommended. Regardless of what product is used, improper implant technique can result in implants being lost due to an abscess forming at the implant site.

–Routinely check implanter needle for burrs or obstructions, such as cartilage.

–Be aware of variations among breeds with respect to skin thickness, size, etc., and adjust implant procedure accordingly.

–Make sure the animal is confined in a squeeze chute or head gate.

–Be careful when inserting the needle to pierce the skin without going into the ear cartilage.

–Assign a single individual to implanting responsibility to ensure more uniform implanting once the technique becomes routine.

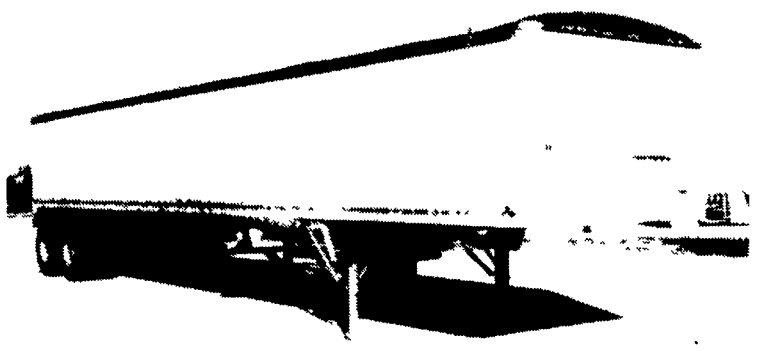
Double-wall trailers available from Wilson

SIOUX CITY, Iowa — Lighter trailer weight with greater strength is provided by a new Double-Wall Hopper on the market now from Wilson Trailer Company of Sioux City, Iowa.

The DWH-100 has a one-piece side skin inside and out. Concealed extruded aluminum side posts on 14" and 18" centers are riveted with larger fasteners on 2" centers, making them 50 percent stronger than conventional designs.



Wilson Trailer Company's double-wall hoppers come in 66 and 78-inch heights, and 40 or 42-foot lengths.

Two lower hoppers and trap assemblies are virtually all aluminum for lighter weight, utilizing exclusive extrusion designs for greater strength. Smooth inside hopper walls and low-profile rivet heads give improved unloading with reduced material hang-up.

The streamlined front end, sides, and rear end provide improved aerodynamics for greater fuel economy.

Double-Wall Hopper units are available in 40- and 42-foot lengths. Body heights are 66" and 78". Standard king pin setting is 22" deep. Each trailer is equipped with 22" tubeless steel disc wheels and 100-level nylon tires.

For more information, contact Wilson Trailer Company, 4400 South Lewis Boulevard, Sioux City, IA 51106. Phone (712) 943-5591.

Pennfield Corp. names three managers

LANCASTER – Pennfield Corporation, 711 Rohrerstown Road, recently appointed three managers, according to Ernest O. Horn, Jr., President.

Nancy A. Cunningham, 935 West Walnut Street, has been appointed employee relations manager at Pennfield Farms Chicken, the company's poultry processing plant in Fredericksburg. Before joining Pennfield, Cunningham was associated with Tufts University, Medford, Mass. for ten years.

William J. Varano has been named manager of Swine Marketing in the company's Feed Marketing Division. Varano received his B.S. in Agronomy and his M.S. in Agronomy and Agricultural Engineering at the University of Maryland. Prior to joining Pennfield, Varano was associated with the University of Maryland as a research station administrator and as a consultant with Agro Systems, Inc., Columbia, Maryland, providing farm management consulting services on agronomy.

Also named to Feed Marketing as Specialty Feed Manager was James E. F. Wiswesser. A graduate of Penn State University, he received his B.S. degree in Animal Sciences and Management. Most recently, Wiswesser was associated with Blue Seal Feeds, Lawrence, Mass., and prior to that he had been with American Cyanamid Company, Wayne, N.J. A resident of Sherman, Conn., Wiswesser and his family will be relocating to the Lancaster area.

Two lubricants stop rust in egg conveyor systems

STONEHAM, Mass. – Spraflex, a surface lubricant for chain drives, and Chain Drive Pin & Bushing Lubricant, which penetrates and lubricates close clearance bearings, have been successfully applied by egg processing plants in eliminating rust in conveyor systems.

The two products of the Chemical Products Division of A.W. Chesterton Company are authorized for use in federally inspected poultry plants in the United States by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Spraflex is a complex lubricating compound that bonds a wear shield to load-bearing surfaces. It holds a lubricating cushion between friction surfaces, forming an elastic, retractable film to replace its own lubricant every revolution.

Pin & Bushing Lubricant is specially formulated to penetrate between the close clearance of chain drive bushings and pins to provide critical lubrication.

For further information, write for Bulletin 73570 to A.W Chesterton Company, Middlesex Industrial Park, Stoneham, MA 02180.

FARM CREDIT SERVICE

Farm Credit News

Berks-Lehigh Farm Credit elects officers

ALLENTOWN — Eight hundred members and guests attended the 1985 stockholders' meeting of the Berks-Lehigh Valley Farm Credit Associations on Friday, March 29, in Allentown.

Bernard C. Flory, general manager, congratulated the members of both the Production Credit Association (PCA) and the Federal Land Bank Association (FLBA) for maintaining a 97-percent current status on their loans. He further reported that the association experienced a 4 percent growth during 1984, a commendable performance considering there are so many adverse conditions facing agriculture at the present time.

Flory also stated that the farm credit system is undergoing a period of major change. Some of the more notable changes during the past year are: the offering of a farm record and tax service to all our agricultural friends, the initiation of a fixed-rate loan program, available to qualified borrowers for a period of up to 365 days; and the adoption of the new farm credit system symbol, the Biostar

Berks-Lehigh Valley Farm Credit service covers Berks, Lehigh, Northampton, Schuylkill, Monroe, Carbon, and Pike Counties, and presently, has a combined volume of over $101 million dollars loaned to 1919 borrowers.

Herbert Wetzel, Berks County Extension director, was chairman of the elections, and announced the following results: re-elected to a 3-year term as FLBA Directors were. George W. Tallman, Tower City and William G. Howerter, Kempton Re-elected to 3-year terms as PCA directors were; Wiley P. Gehman, Emmaus and Kenneth L. Schlegel, Fleetwood.

Also elected were the following members of the 1986 nominating committees: PCA: Charles A. Savidge, Mertztown; Mark W. Seidel, Maxatawny; Richard P Heffelfinger, Northampton FLBA. Donald W. Miller, Andreas; Dennis J. Dorney, New Tripoli; and Carl H. Rabenold, Kutztown.

Toxic wastes: They're slowly poisoning America

National Geographic News Service

WASHINGTON – Into the land it goes, millions of metric tons of it a year. Cyanide, pesticides, toxic PCBs, paint sludge, raw materials for varnish, carpets, and detergents, and more–all constituting what's come to be known as "hazardous waste."

It's disposed of in pits, ponds, deep wells, and landfills, threatening America's groundwater. It's injected between rock layers, or illegally sprayed on ordinary trash, compacted, and sent undetected to city landfills. Sham recyclers even water down heating fuel with liquid toxic waste for resale.

No one knows the true sum of the nation's hazardous waste, but the 264 million metric tons regulated by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency in 1981 would fill the New Orleans Superdome almost 1,500 over. Since 1950, Americans have disposed of possibly 6 billion tons in or on the land, writes Allen A. Boraiko in a comprehensive roundup of the nation's hazardous wates problem, in the March National Geographic.

THOUSANDS OF SITES

By last October, EPA had designated or proposed 786 waste sites for a cleanup list, but the agency estimates the list may eventually grow to 2,500 sites. The congressional Office of Technology Assessment estimated in March that 10,000 or more dumps will end up on the list at an eventual cleanup cost of more than $100 billion.

The buildup of waste has steadily increased citizens' exposure to chemicals that can cause cancer, birth defects, miscarriages, nervous disorders, blood diseases, and damage to liver, kidneys, or genes.

Hazardous waste can be as ordinary as the mercury in an exhausted watch battery or the butane residue in a disposable cigarette lighter, a few drops of lye in an "empty" can of oven cleaner, or the toxic PCBs in an old TV set.

On a larger scale, a million gallons of oil muck laced with PCBs–once commonly used in industry–were found at the huge hazardous-waste dump near Swartz Creek, Mich. So far 120,000 tons of waste and contaminated soil from the site have been reburied elsewhere, and the cleanup is not complete.

Some progress is occurring. Under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA), passed by Congress in 1976, some hazardous waste is monitored and regulated. The Superfund, created to clean up some of the nation's worst dumps, is about to be renewed and may expand to more than $10 billion. Environmental groups and chemical companies have formed a nonprofit corporation–Clean Sites Inc.–to aid cleanup of at least 20 dump sites.

But vast amounts of toxic waste still go unregulated. For example, EPA annually exempts an estimated 5 million tons of industrial wastes discharged as domestic sewage, including most of the metal-finishing industry's toxic metal dregs.

monitoring for groundwater pollution are spotty at most hazardous-waste-disposal site. "On average, 60 percent of major disposal facilitites don't obey all the new laws and regulations," concedes John Skinner, director of EPA's Office of Solid Waste.

Many of the waste site penetrate or overlie aquifers, the natural underground reservoirs that supply much of the country's drinking water, Groundwater is polluted at the majority of Superfund sites; many waste impoundments were actually designed to leach waste into the ground.

Waste taints the groundwater serving homes near the Superfund site of Stringfellow Acid Pits, in a canyon 50 miles east of Los Angeles. The site still holds most of the 34 million gallons of solvent, acids, toxic metals, and DDT sent there between 1956 and 1972. Despite $10 million spent to halt it, pollution has infiltrated an aquifer supplying seven eastern Los Angeles suburbs.

More than 1,400 sites have already been ordered closed or restricted to the public because of severe contamination by toxic substances, including some that are radioactive. The list, considered likely to grow, is made up of sites with contaminated soil, water, or air. The sites are as diverse as a pizza shop in Delaware, the municipal water supplies of two Kansas towns, and Main Street in Durham, Conn.

Chemical companies, which create two-thirds of the regulated hazardous waste, are detoxifying the bulk of their harmful byproducts. DuPont's mammoth Chambers Works in New Yersey scrubs 40 million tons of toxic manifacturing residues a year. Incinerators at Dow Chemical's Louisiana Division burn toxic waste to generate steam heat and cut fuel bills. And 3M sells a corrosive byproduct of videotape manufacture to fertilizer makers.

MORE BURIED THAN BURNED

Though incineration reduces the volume and dangers of hazardous waste, industry in general cremates less than 1 percent of its toxic castoffs. The reason: Burning waste can be three times more expensive than burying it.

As Boraiko learned from a criminologist, hazardous waste is making some people richer. Organized crime, he reports, has been found at every level of the toxic waste disposal industry–in hauling, landfilling, incineration, and recycling–all over the country. For example, hundreds of legitimate hazardous-waste disposal companies must buy permission to operate alongside competitors allied with or controlled by organized criminals. Payoffs go to mobsters through a national network of loan sharks.

Meanwhile, the Superfund's list of dumps continues to swell, far outpacing funds for cleanup. "Every landfill poses a future threat," says William Hedeman, who is in charge of Superfund cleanups. "Some sites may cost hundreds of millions each to remedy."

American Dairy Science Assoc. to meet in Illinois

URBANA, Ill. – The theme for the 1985 annual meeting of the American Dairy Science Association to be held at the University of Illinois, Urbana, Ill., is "Welcome Home." The American Dairy Science Association was founded on the University of Illinois--Urbana campus in 1906 and members will meet June 9 to 12 to celebrate its 80th birthday and to exchange scientific information about dairy production and dairy foods.

The meeting is open to anyone with an interest in dairying, and the most recent scientific findings in dairy production and dairy foods research will be presented. This up-to-date information will be of interest to dairy producers, dairy food specialists and industry professionals, said Dr. Jimmy H. Clark, dairy cattle nutritionist at the University of Illinois and chairperson of ADSA's Production Division.

About 1,800 people associated with the dairy industry are expected to attend, Clark said. More than 500 papers describing recent research findings will be presented.

"There will also be several symposia on dairy production in which excellent speakers will give invited presentations on timely topics," he said.

A symposium likely to draw considerable interest is one on "Growth Hormone Biotechnology". It will explore the biological effects of growth hormone, somatomedins and growth hormone-releasing factors on milk production of dairy cows. The impact of this new technology on the dairy industry in the future also will be discussed.

Other symposia topics include:

–Proposed changes in nutrient requirements of dairy cattle. Speakers will discuss proposed changes to be included in a revised publication on nutrient requirements of dairy cattle that is to be published by the National Academy of Science.

–Reducing somatic cell counts Dairy Herd Improvement Association (DHIA) cell counting, dry cow management, leukocyte response to drug therapy as well as the impact of reducing somatic cell counts will be major topics of discussion.

–Advances in Cytogenetics This session will feature presentations dealing with detection of chromosome-damaging agents, interrelationships in molecular genetics, cytogenetics, and animal breeding, and chromosomes in the study of birth defects, infertility, gene mapping, cancer and evolution.

–Protein and fiber digestion, passage and utilization in lactating cows. Scientists will present the most recent data on the relationship of protein and fiber degradation in the rumen and passage to the small intestine on nutrient utilization and animal performance.

–International germ plasm exchange and evaluation. Two international scientists, Dr. J. Philipson of Sweden and Dr. M. Stolzman of Poland, will present data on the genetic evaluation of dairy cattle, and Dr. B.T. McDaniels of North Carolina State University will talk about principles of germ plasma comparisons.

–Impacts on the consumption of dairy products. Consumption trends for milk and dairy products, imitation or filled products, effects of advertising and solids content on consumption of milk and dairy products, and problems of standardizing fluid milk to a constant solids content will be major points emphasized by six highly qualified speakers.

"Other invited speakers will discuss the effects of nutrition and management on yield of milk components, computers and their role in dairy herd management, and various aspects of reproductive physiology," said Clark.

More information about the ADSA meeting and registration materials can be obtained from C.J. Cruse, ADSA Executive Secretary, 309 W. Clark St., Champaign, Ill. 61820.

West Virginia farmer sues state over deer damages

DEBBIE STILES-RENZI
Staff Correspondent

ST. GEORGE, W.Va. – After three years of heavy crop losses due to deer, farmer Lester Burns has taken the matter to court by suing the West Virginia Department of Natural Resources.

Where lies the responsibility for deer damage?

Lester Burns contends that it's the State's deer who have caused the damage on his Tucker County farm, therefore it is the State's responsibility to do something to alleviate the problem. The Department of Natural Resources (DNR) is the state agency in charge of evaluating farmers' losses caused by wildlife.

"They keep them ate off," Burns told those assembled in Tucker County Court during day-long litigation in Parsons. He was referring to the deer's consumption of red clover blossoms, blossoms, which, in photos exhibited as evidence before the court, were strangely absent in July meadow scenes.

He made the same statement in reference to alfalfa stands that had gotten started growing in spring, only to be eaten off by deer, he claims.

Burns, 70, a cattleman and purebred Landrace hog breeder, estimates he lost 75% of his corn crop, approximately two-thirds of his alfalfa, and considerable amounts of other forage crops because of deer in 1984. He has suffered what he considers severe losses the past three years, which prompted his legal action.

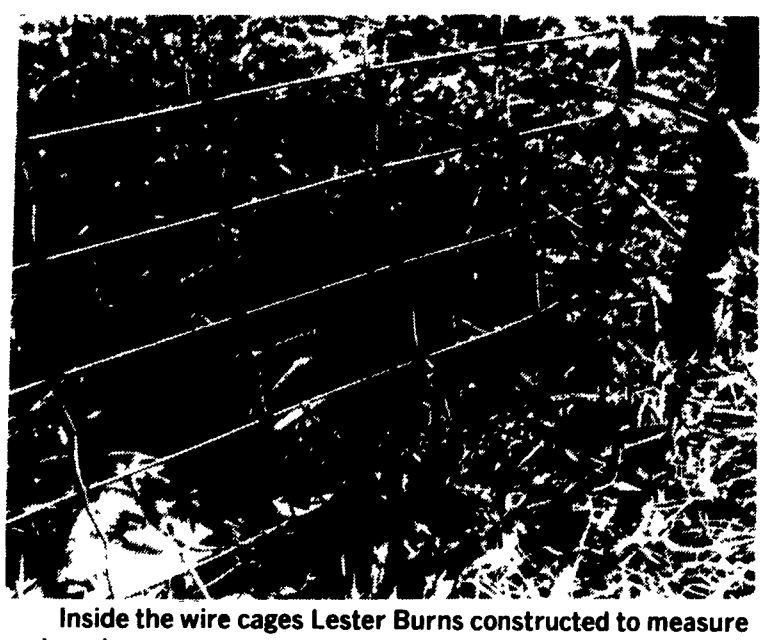
The DNR's present policy on deer damage is to allow the county Conservation Officers to assess a farmer's crop damage to determine the cause and extent of damage. Based on the Conservation Officer's individual judgment, he/she issues permit(s) to allow the farmer to legally hunt the offending deer.

In 1983, Burns was issued 10 permits (for ten deer). In 1984 he was issued 25. He exhausted all of these permits.

"But I have counted as many as 75 deer in one evening," Burns stated. He says deer numbers on and near his hillside/ridgetop farm have been gradually increasing, over time; Burns, who has farmed in the St. George area for over fifty years, believes the overwhelming damage he's seen is due to the excessive deer population.

Deer come over the hilly meadow from the woods to eat Lester Burns' corn, also damaging alfalfa, timothy, clover and orchardgrass meadows and pastures.

Before Lester Burns could harvest his corn last fall, deer had nibbled at the ears. The Tucker County, WV farmer contends that the state's deer herd has severely reduced the feed and forage-producing capacity of his farm.



Inside the wire cages Lester Burns constructed to measure deer damage, grass grows 4-6 inches higher than outside the enclosures. Although this cage was placed in a pasture (others were put in meadows), the cattle do not utilize this pasture heavily, as evidenced by the complete lack of cow manure in the field. Deer mature, however, was evident everywhere.

Every farmer in West Virginia expects some crop loss attributable to deer. What is unacceptable to Burns, however, is the amount of damage, coupled with the State's method of dealing with the problem by the issuance of permits to kill the deer.

"My client does not want to see all the deer killed," emphasized John Cooper, attorney for Burns. Though originally Burns had sought compensation for crop losses, he now is only asking that the State work with him in finding an acceptable solution to the problem.

What about fencing? High tensile electric fence would seem to be the answer, as it has proven highly effective in deterring deer. But Burns says he is too old to get a return on the huge investment necessary for the amount and type of fencing required. And with the losses he has incurred in the last three years, he is also not in a financial position to consider fencing his forty acres of meadow, his corn and alfalfa ground.

Burns is a full-time farmer. In the last three years he has raised between six and ten acres of alfalfa, seven to twelve acres corn, and made hay off of 40. The remainder is steep woodland.

He owns 285 acres and rents an additional 400 acres. The only other income Burns and his wife have is a Social Security pension. In Tucker County Circuit Court Burns testified that the two-thirds reduction of his hog and cattle herds in the last five years has been because of his inability to produce enough feed on the farm to support the previous numbers. He attributes the diminished production to the consumption and/or trampling of his crops by deer. Burns now has 54 head of cattle (including calves) and 60 hogs and pigs, total.

Judge Donald Hott, who heard the case, asked Assistant Attorney General Follett, state counsel for the DNR, "Do we have too many deer?" Perhaps he might have more aptly inquired, Does the state have more deer (in some areas) than it can effectively manage?

While DNR officials were unclear on this question, DNR counselor Follet admitted that the State recognized Burns had a problem, but wasn't in a financial position to either remove the deer (through use of tranquilizers) or fence them out of Burn's property.

one thorny dilemma: West Virginia, to date, has no written policy regarding the fair evaluation and compensation of farmers' crop losses due to deer damage.

"When it got down to the final decision, that one little word – significant – was the issue," Burns said later. The State could not define for the court the meaning of "significant damage" nor could it produce any set guidelines by which the State's Conservation Officers were supposed to evaluate deer damage.

Forrest Blume, one of Tucker county's Conservation Officers, testified that most of the deer damage cases he encountered were family gardens, and with those he considered a 50% crop loss as being roughly $100 to $200 worth of damage, equal to one deer, based on the amount a person might pay in fines to the State for illegally killing one deer.

He used the example of a gardener who has three rows of green beans" if one-and-a-half rows were completely destroyed by deer, that constituted a 50% loss to him, and he would generally issue the gardener one deer permit.

Blume said he had more experience with evaluating deer damage in home gardens, rather than in agricultural crops.

James Evans, District Game Biologist for the DNR also testified it was up to individual Conservation Officers to use their own judgment in estimating substantial crop damage, that there was no written policy.

Where lies the responsibility? Court recessed without a decision being reached; Judge Hott is expected to deliver one within three weeks time. WVU Extension is looking at the problem of accurately measuring ag crop damage, and a meeting of DNR Conservation Officers and County Agents is planned for this fall.

Brockett's Ag Advice

By John E. Brockett
Farm Management Agent
Lewistown Extension Office

Calf Management

Calf management is a much neglected part of farm management. Many dairymen get too busy doing "More Important Things" and thus relegate calf care to whoever is available or maybe to no one.

Other dairymen feel a financial bind and try to cut expenses by "cheaping" their calf-raising program.

Those who follow either one of these destructive policies know little about financial management, because the end result is self defeating.

Either the heifer becomes stunted forever or it winds up costing the business even more money to put that animal into the milking string on a full-scale basis. One reason why so many first-calf heifers do so poorly in relation to their genetic ability is because of a poor start in life.

Which would you rather do - spend 75 cents a day to feed a calf properly or $1.35 a day to play catch up when the calf reaches 12 months of age or lose part (5 to 20%) of your milk production after she has freshened?

Calves need TLC. They also need ample quantities of good quality, clean feed, both grain and forage; lots of clean, dry bedding; freedom from dampness and drafts; and isolation from wastes of older animals. All of these items are required. It is not a case of where you can do a good job in one area then neglect another area and have everything turn out right.

Hay For Calves

Hay - good quality hay - is an essential part of most good but economical calf raising programs. Warning: a calf has a somewhat limited hay storage tank (stomach, gut, rumen).

If you insist on feeding them a lot of stemmy, coarse, low-quality hay, the response will be slow growth.

If you feed them too much real high quality, pure alfalfa hay, the response may be scours.

Best bet is a fine stemmed, grassy alfalfa hay that is free from mold and mustiness.

Start calves on this type of hay as soon as possible. We always put a little hay in front of them on day 1. Some calves get bored and start nibbling on it within a few days, while others may take as long as 2 weeks to start working on their hay. Clean out the hay rack periodically so they have fresh hay in front of them most of the time.

Grain and Protein

Calves need sufficient protein so they can maintain a fairly rapid growth rate. At first they may be somewhat finicky so you may need to sweeten up the grain with molasses. The important thing is to get them to eating hay and grain as soon as possible.

You will reduce the incidence of scours considerably once they are on full feed. Grain should never be left in the box more than from one feeding to the next. The grain box should be cleaned out every day, especially in warm weather.

Do not, under any circumstances, put fresh feed on top of waste material or old feed. If a cat decides to use a feed box as a nice resting place, either get rid of the cat or cover the box so the cat can not get into it (of course, you will have to leave it open enough so the calf can eat).

When

When does a calf become old enough to graduate into the "well, we can neglect them now" stage? The answer is never, but you can reduce vigilance somewhat once they are 10 days past weaning. That does not mean neglect.

She must be kept growing if you are going to wind up with an animal that will produce economically to her genetic potential. The time when most farmers goof up in their calf raising is between weaning and age of 6 months. They are generally very undemanding at that age.

As long as you give them something to chew on and feed them when they see or hear you feed the cows or other animals, they are fairly quiet. They are not big enough yet to fend for themselves even if they had enough room to do so. Many farms feed them off the floor or with older animals. Some farmers even turn them out into a pasture of sorts. The results: poor growth, parasites, haybelly, rough coats, etc.

Calves up to 6 months still need good quality hay. At 3 months you can substitute some good silage for part of that hay, but remember what happens with your little kids if they drink too much water before dinner. Those calves will still need some grassy-alfalfa hay. They also need good quality grain (14 to 18% protein, depending on the protein in your hay) in a quantity of 4 to 5 pounds per day. At 2 months of age their appetites are such that you can probably forget the molasses.

Measure Them

At least up to 6 months of age you should measure them once a month. I can hear some of you now - Wow! - That takes time. O.K. I'll back off if you will do it just once then see how they compare with the norm. If your calves are even 85% of normal then perhaps you can skip this chore.

I suspect that many of you will have at least 10 excuses as to why your calves are so far below

Lancaster Ag Preserve applications up 250% over '84

LANCASTER — The Lancaster County Agricultural Preserve Board has received this year's applications for preservation deed restriction sales on 15 farms in western Lancaster County. With three Agricultural Preserves established, all of this year's applications have come from Agricultural Preserve II which includes more than 27,000 acres in Conoy, East Donegal, West Donegal, and Mount Joy Townships.

Within Agricultural Preserves one of the preservation options available to farm owners is deed restriction sale by incentive payment of $250 per acre. In most cases this amount represents a portion of the value of the deed restriction or preservation easement on the farm. The deed restriction may be sold either permanently or for 25 years or more, in which case, the instrument can be terminated sometime after 2010 with a payback plus fixed, simple interest.

The effect of deed restrictions is to keep the farms in agricultural and directly associated uses except for the possibility of several new dwellings for family or farm employees.

In 1984 the Agricultural Preserve Board received 6 applications, all from Agricultural Preserve I in the Ephrata-Lititz area; this year the applications are as located as follows:

Agricultural Preserve II

Mount Joy Township	9 farms	864.5 acres
East Donegal Township	5 farms	521.4 acres
Conoy Township	1 farm	196.5 acres
	Totals 15 farms	1,582.4 acres

To date, 21 farms have been preserved through deed restrictions in Lancaster County. On 17 of these farms deed restrictions have been donated and on four farms deed restrictions have been solid via incentive payment. Most have been permanent deed restrictions.

While considering this year's 15 deed restriction sale applications, the Agricultural Preserve Board is working with approximately the same number of landowners who have expressed interest in deed restriction donation.

Members of the Agricultural Preserve Board are heartened by the level of interest and commitment among Lancaster County farmers.

Lancaster County has established an Agricultural Land Preservation Fund which receives both public appropriations and private contributions. It is this Fund that is used to cover the legal and appraisal costs of accepting deed restrictions by donation and the costs of deed restriction incentive payments.

While deed restriction applications have been submitted on 15 farms totalling 1582 acres, what can be acquired with available preservation dollars are deed restrictions on approximately 1,000 acres.

The Agricultural Preserve Board will utilize their farmland ranking system, which is based on development pressure within the Preserve and productive capability of the farms to set priorities for deed restriction acquisition.

Ag Advice

standard. I have heard most of them but if you feel that you have a new one, I'd be interested.

When I was a county agent in Potter County a number of years ago, a few people who had children in 4-H found that their kids' 4-H animals were bigger, nicer looking and, did better as first calf heifers than their own.

They reasoned that the 4-H animals had a better genetic base than their own, which may have been true, except that occasionally a regular farm calf was raised with the 4-H calf.

It never ceased to amaze me that the farmers had a whole list of reasons why that calf also was bigger, nicer looking, and did better than the other animals in the herd. Sometimes they even said that if they had put as much money into their own animals as was put into the 4-H animals theirs would have done as well or maybe even better.

Ask your county agent to show you how to measure the calves. Also ask the county agent for a guide as to how big they should be at various ages. I dare you to measure them once.

Good dairymen probably don't the dare because they are already aware of their calves' sizes. Poor dairymen won't accept the dare because they fear what they will find.

What about you?

PROWL® attacks weeds through the root and shoot for 2-way protection in conservation tillage.

PROWL® herbicide is more photostable, less volatile and less water soluble than some other herbicides. So PROWL stays put, to attack grasses and broadleaf weeds in the root and shoot all season long. PROWL moves through the residue to deliver excellent control of 21 grasses and broadleaf weeds. PROWL. Right for conservation tillage.

The benefits of animal ag.

As the world rushes toward overpopulation and eventual starvation, a lot of pressure is being generated to drastically change, or even eliminate, animal agriculture.

The thought behind this is that animals are inefficient users of protein. And instead of pushing a lot of feed grain through steers, pigs and chickens, we should grow food crops that can be consumed directly by people.

We may come to that eventually – before we starve we'll make many changes in our eating habits – but don't expect Americans to stop eating meat any time soon.

In fact, don't expect them to stop until they are forced by price, scarcity or some other overwhelming factor.

Consumers won't stop eating meat out of a feeling of guilt or of compassion for hungry people in other lands.

Let's face it – most of us like meat and we're not about to survive on soybeans and granola while we still have all the other vestiges of the good life. As long as we pay such a small chunk of the weekly paycheck for meat, we'll keep on buying.

As you look at some other countries – notably Japan, you realize how much people are willing to pay for the kinds of food they enjoy. It will take more than a long-range, loosely defined world need to cause any noticeable shifting from meat to plant products.

There's another side to the story, that of the producer. A substantial number of American farmers raise meat animals as part of their operations. To suddenly stop producing them would be economic disaster for those farmers.

You see, American farmers already grow much more grain than we use in this country. To stop producing meat animals would increase the supply of grain available without a corresponding demand and that would make grain prices even worse than they are now.

People who are asking for such a shift really don't understand this or maybe don't even care. They simply look at the world populations figures and moralize about animal agriculture.

Another factor that I don't think is being considered is how much of America's farmland is totally unsuited to crop production. Millions of acres in the West can't be irrigated, will never be irrigated, and consequently will never support crop production. Vast areas in the East won't support crop production. This land is either too steep or too wet or too rough or for some other reason can't be cultivated.

Granted there are a lot more acres that could be growing food and feed crops. There are also millions of acres that will never be tilled but that are quite capable of supporting livestock.

Visiting a farm in Pennsylvania recently I was reminded of the place of animal agriculture. Even though the fellow farms more than 500 acres, he tills no more than a couple of hundred. The rest is pasture, woods, steep valleys and other wasteland that can't be effectively farmed.

Soil erosion is a constant threat on virtually every acre and must be dealth with constantly. Open fields are broken up into strips of corn, soybeans, alfalfa and grassland. Crops are rotated to help prevent erosion, and no-till planting is the rule on most acres. Even with all of the technology that's available, his soil washed and must be continually repaired.

To ask this man to sell his livestock and grow food crops would be stupid. Through careful management he grows all the crops he can, which he then feeds to his livestock. He plans for enough livestock to utilize the grassland. If he runs short he can easily buy feed, but none of the roughage that grows on his hilly acres is wasted for want of a cow to eat it.

That farm is not suited to all-out crop production and never will be, but it's a darn good livestock farm. There are many farms like that in almost every state. Any sort of national policy aimed at converting them to crop farms would be a mistake. Likewise, any effort on the part ofg concerned citizens to pressure livestock farmers would be ill advised. It would be far better to let farmers figure out for themselves what their farms are best suited for.

Sulbra Co-ops to host business seminar

TOWANDA – On Thursday, April 18 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m., the Sulbra Council of Cooperatives will present the Cooperative Business Institute, a one day educational awards program on farmer cooperatives. All youth 11 to 19 years of age are invited to attend.

The morning program will provide participants with the opportunity to learn more about the Pennsylvania Association of Farmer Cooperatives. Featured will be various cooperative commercials and a talk on "The Importance of Farmer Cooperative" by Gary Green, dairy/poultry farmer, President of the Bradford County Extension Association Executive Committee, of Neath.

Participants will be presented a quiz on cooperatives. Questions will be based on material contained in the study guides, which are available at your Extension Office and from Traci Diehl of Farm Credit or Brent Raupers of Claverack Rural Electric Cooperative, Inc.

The quizzes will be graded immediately after they are collected. A $20 reward will be given for the high quiz score and $10 for the second high score.

The five high scoring youth who have completed their freshman year in high school will receive an expense-paid trip to the Pennsylvania Association of Farmer Cooperatives.

Reservations may be made by the 4-H Club leader or Vo-Ag supervisor by April 1, with Traci Diehl of Farm Credit, Box 85, Wysox, PA–265-8161; or Bradford or Sullivan County Extension Offices. Please indicate the names of participants, leaders or supervisors and guests.

HOBO'S, BUMS, AND DRIFTERS

Harking back to an earlier day, it was quite common to 'entertain' one or more out-of work drifters every week of the year. That word entertain means to provide a free meal for them, and allowing them to bed down in the barn for the night. We called them 'bums' in those days, but they were never turned away without some kind of handout. They were the classic hobo's of American life and history. Today they would be arrested for vagrancy.

Of course, our farm was one of the regular stops for all the Bums that travelled the road Most often, they would stop around noon, or late in the evening. The nooners could be expected to move on after a meal, while the late evening bums spent the night in the haymow.

Traveling on foot was more acceptable then, as the pace of life was slow and lazy. But one of my favorite drifters who made regular stops at Mama's back door was an old veteran of the Spanish-American War who had only one leg. His crutches were heavy for his slight build, but he explained that they had to be that way to withstand the mileage he put on them. He spent his summers traveling the back roads of Pennsylvania because he like the 'good Dutch folks', and he could depend on them for good food. He usually hopped a train for the south when the weather got too cool for comfort. He never revealed where the winters were spent, but I guess it was anywhere the boxcars went before he was kicked off the train.

He never told me his name, se we called him 'Stumpy'. Mama would fix him a tray of food, and he would sit under the old cherry tree in the front yard to eat. Always polite and gracious, he would compliment Mama and express his gratitude for the food. I think she appreciated it, although she never let on that she like bums—she simply tolerated them as a necessary inconvenience.

Stumpy was one who always arrived at the farm in the cool of the evening. He was pleasant, but not very talkative, so we learned little about him except that he had no family or close relatives. Papa liked to talk to him but discouraged me from getting too close, do details about his life remained a mystery which I have always wondered about.

Papa always had either me or Danny (my older brother) pile some fresh hay on the barnfloor for Stumpy to sleep on, as it was too hard for him to climb the ladder to the haymow. He seemed to expect and get some extra consideration, including a tray of breakfast before he left in the morning.

He never offered to do any work, nor was he expected to. He was almost like a fantasy figure, expected, yet not knowing when or why he came. He simply appeared at the back door, was welcomed, fed and stayed the night, then disappeared again until some warm evening next summer.

They must have had some kind of sign or mark to designate where they could expect a generous meal, because many hobos stopped at our farm. Some would offer to work for a meal, but that was rare. They were on the road because they liked to travel, not because they wanted to work. Only the ones that needed to buy chewing tobacco or an occasional drink ever offered to help with the chores. I don't remember that a hobo ever offered to clean out a stable or help to milk.

Only once did Papa get a transient to stay a couple of days to help get the wheat into the barn. That fellow needed some new shoes and a supply of Mail Pouch chewing tobacco. After three days of stacking sheaves into the hot barn loft, he decided that he had earned enough to keep him on the road for a couple of weeks. Papa drove him to town on Saturday, bought him a pair of shoes for $1.98, and six packs of tobacco. We never saw him again, Oh, for the free and easy life of a hobo!

NEDCO to market calcium-fortified milk products

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — NEDCO, the Northeast Dairy Cooperative Federation Inc., of Syracuse, N.Y. has announced that it has successfully developed and will market a new, all-natural, nonfat dry milk powder that meets the needs for extra dietary calcium now recommended by most nutritionists.

According to Dean McCormac, Chief Executive Officer of NEDCO, the new milk product contains no synthetic additives and is made exclusively from Grade A Milk. Calcium enrichment is achieved, McCormac said, by removing milk fats using standard industry methods and by adding naturally occurring milk minerals isolated by a new process, patents pending, developed by IGI Biotechnology, Inc., Columbia.

"Our purpose," Mr. McCormac said, "was to provide commercial bakers and other food manufacturers with a 100% natural product that can be easily incorporated into breads, cookies, cakes, soups; yogurts, puddings, frozen desserts, candies, and other food products in order to meet nutritional requirements for increased calcium and to do so without sacrificing the mouthfeel, texture, bulk and palatability characteristics demanded by customers.

Adding gypsum, ground up oyster shells, antacids, bone meal or dolomite, currently popular calcium supplements, might increase the calcium content of food products," McCormac added, "but they certainly don't do very much for their look or taste. Milk minerals made much more sense to us as a calcium supplement.

Interest in dietary calcium supplements stems from increasing awareness on the part of doctors and public health professionals of the relationship between long-term low calcium intake and a number of age-related conditions, especially in women. These include osteoporosis, a thinning of the bones that results in an increased incidence of fractures and may lead to compression of the spine causing back pain; and periodontal disease, an inflammation of the tissue surrounding teeth. In addition, a recent study of data from the Health and Nutrition Examination Survey of the National Center for Health Statistics suggests that significant decreases in the consumption of calcium are also importantly related to hypertension of high blood pressure.

Much controversy surrounds the current recommended dietary allowance (RDA) of 800 milligrams of calcium a day from the age of one year through old age and the RDA of 1,200 milligrams a day for adolescents, whose bones are rapidly growing Most researchers believe, however, that women past 35 or 40 need 1,000 to 1,500 milligrams of calcium daily to maintain a balance between dietary calcium intake and calcium excretion This requirement is clearly greater than the less than 600 milligrams a day of calcium found by the U.S. Public Health Service to be the average intake of American women after age 35

One-quarter cup or approximately 28 grams of NEDCO's calcium-enriched milk powder contains slightly more than 800 milligrams of calcium, 600 milligrams of phosphorus and 125 milligrams of magnesium "That represents," McCormac said, "100% of the current RDA for calcium, 77% of the RDA for phosphorus and 42% of the RDA for magnesium "

"We're clearly not in a position," McCormac said, "to make judgments as to how much calcium-enriched nonfat dry milk should be put into any specific food product. What we have done, quite simply, is to develop a new milk product that is low in calories, low in cholesterol and fats, low in sodium and high in calcium and can be sold at the same price as conventional nonfat dry milk We think that food manufacturers and homemakers, particularly women, will be very pleased "

Farmers and manufacturers join to promote ice cream

ARLINGTON, Va. - The National Dairy Board recently approved a contract for six weeks of national, non-branded ice cream advertising, beginning June 17.

The advertising campaign will be the first in which dairy farmers and manufacturers jointly promote their products. The campaign will be carried out by the Board, the International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers (IAICM), and the state and regional dairy promotion organizations. This is the first time different organizations will sponsor branded and generic advertising that will complement and reinforce one another.

Total expenditures for the campaign will approach $14 million. The National Dairy Board will spend approximately $4 million on national network advertising. IAICM members have pledged $8 million in new money over 1984 spending. Of this, $5 million will go for local, branded TV ads, and $3 million for other media such as newspapers and radio.

State and regional promotion groups will spend up to $2 million to tie into the campaign with various forms of advertising and by placing promotional materials in grocery stores nationwide.

The Board's advertising is being created by D'Arcy MacManus Masius, Chicago. IAICM members will handle their own advertising.

"Ice Cream the Beautiful" is the theme of the Board's two commercials as well as of the in-store materials. Both commercials will depict a variety of people in different situations – at home, at work, socializing, etc. – consuming ice cream with meals and for snacks.

Targeted to all age groups but with an emphasis on mothers aged 25-54 (the heaviest purchases), the ads will run during daytime, primetime and late fringe air times.

The Board will also sponsor trade press ads, designed to alert the food industry to the promotion, encourage tie-ins and point out the possible need to stock more ice cream in stores during the advertising campaign.

"This is the first time we have had producers sitting down with manufacturers to organize a joint campaign to sell our product," said Board Chairman Ivan Strickler, expressing the Board's enthusiasm at having achieved the agreement.

Said Don Lewis, Marketing Manager, Dairies Group, the Southland Corp., "We have seen here all available forces that help sell ice cream coming together. It is giving IAICM the greatest opportunity we have ever had to support a program for our own benefit."

Recent actions at the Board meeting in Reno, Nevada, March 21-22, included the Board authorizing its staff to enter into negotiations to continue through August its national advertising for fluid milk, butter, cheese and dairy calcium. The current advertising contracts expire April 30, the close of the Board's fiscal year.

In addition, the Board approved a third wave of advertising recall for fluid milk (both children's and young adults'), cheese, butter and dairy calcium. This information will be part of the evaluation of the national promotion program's advertising, being carried out by five independent firms.

The meeting was held in conjunction with the 1985 Western Dairy Conference.

The National Dairy Promotion and Research Board was established by Act of Congress to develop a coordinated program of promotion designed to strengthen the dairy industry's position in the marketplace and to maintain and expand domestic and foreign markets and uses for fluid milk and dairy products.

This national program of promotion, research and nutrition education is financed by a mandatory 15-cent per hundredweight assessment on all milk produced and marketed in the contiguous 48 states. The 36-member policy-making Board is composed of dairy producers.

Patz

RUGGED AND RELIABLE... THAT'S THE WAY PATZ BUILDS EQUIPMENT

Move silage... From silo to bunk reliably

A Patz feeding system is headed by the unique Patz cutter-and-claw gathering chain silo unloaders. Select the surface-drive 98B or the ring-drive RD-820. The Patz gathering chain with chain-saw action cuts out frozen and hard-packed silage for full-flow feeding.

Spring tension keeps the Patz power cutter tight to silo walls, even if walls are irregular.

Choose from three over-under chain conveyors with varied capacities and one-way or two-way delivery. Or, chose a versatile side-by-side single chain Patz Material Mover.

The Patz Belt Feeder feeds quickly. The simplicity of design makes maintenance simple and keeps the price low. For other feeding situations, consider a Patz tapered-pan feeder or an in-bunk chain feeder.

All Patz feeding equipment offers a variety of optional accessories to meet your needs.

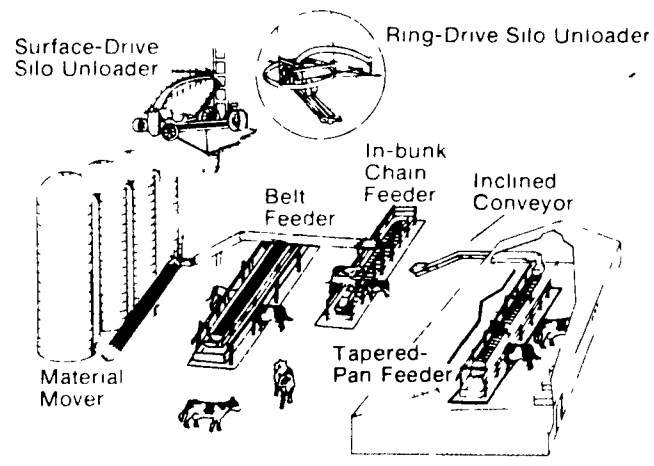
See your Patz dealer for details. He is experienced in installation, service and he has a parts supply on hand to keep you feeding.

Patz builds feed handling systems you can depend on

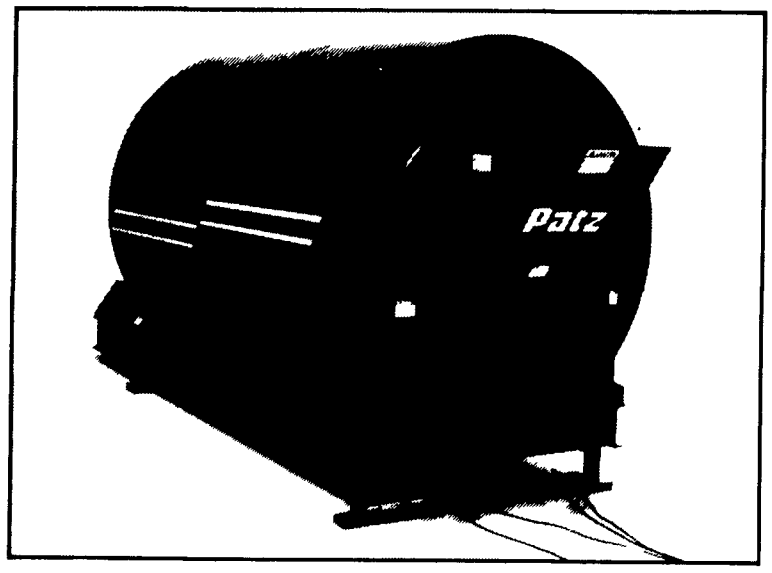
That s because Patz spends a great deal of time in design and field testing to make sure that our equipment will stand up to your requirements

Whether you need a large or small feed handling system a silo unloader, a conveyor, or feeder

Year after year you can depend on



All NEW



Patz Blender/Mixers Feature Tumble Mixing

Patz Blender/Mixers feature a rotating drum with internal conveying flights and a single recirculating auger This provides continuous feed flow as feed enters, moves to the back and is recirculated to the front by a central auger for fast, thorough mixing

Often mixing is done by the time the last ingredient is added

With optional scales, you can formulate and blend rations to meet the exact needs of your cattle The electronic weigh-bar scales system provides easy readout The scales are programmable to sound a buzzer and flash a light when the desired weight of the feed is reached

Two sizes 180 cubic feet mixing capacity (145 bu) and 100 cubic feet mixing capacity (80 bu)

TWO REASONS WHY THE RALSTON PURINA CO. ACCU-LINE LAYER FEEDING PROGRAM WILL HELP YOU GET A BETTER BOTTOM LINE

Nutritional accuracy is of the utmost importance if you are to regulate egg size without reducing production rates.

Accurate nutrient standards for today's high-producing hens must be set. The usable nutrients in ingredients must also be determined.

Some nutrients in all feed ingredients remain undigested and/or unavailable to the bird. The quantity of usable nutrients depends upon the ingredient, processing methods and other factors. Obviously, it is critical to accurately know the amount of usable nutrients there are in any feedstuff.

To increase the accuracy of Purina's knowledge of biological availability, new techniques were implemented. These new techniques, developed by Canadian researchers and refined by Purina Research give True Metabolizable Energy (TME) and True Amino Acid Availability (TAAA) values.

True Metabolizable Energy is a system which permitted Purina to rapidly reevaluate every feedstuff used in Accu-Line rations and accurately establish the usable energy in those ingredients.

Other feed companies continue to formulate rations using published tables for various feed ingredients. These may not accurately reflect current values.

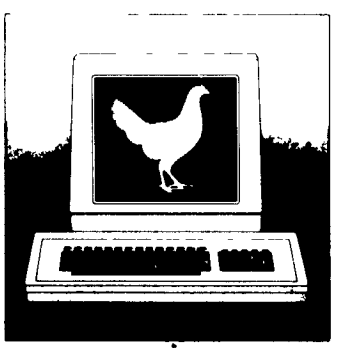
Purina places great emphasis on accurate energy values. Energy is used in all body functions and egg production. It also governs how much hens will eat. When energy requirements are met, birds will stop eating — whether or not they have consumed enough amino acids, minerals and vitamins for maximum performance.

Having accurate energy values is the foundation of precise ration formulation. If the actual energy value is different from the theoretical energy value used in formulation, one of two things will happen:

1. Performance will be reduced because of underfortification of amino acids, vitamins and minerals.
2. Added costs result from an excess amount of these same nutrients that were added to balance an incorrect energy level.

True Available Amino Acid values are equally important. The more accurate Purina knowledge of the usable amino acids in the feed ingredients, the more accurately they can be balanced to the usable energy in the feed.

As a result of these new values, Purina Accu-Line Laying rations can be made from the most efficient combination of ingredients available. The rations accurately supply the hen's daily nutritional needs at the best value possible to Purina customers.



ACCU-LINE™ lets you control egg size to improve profits.
